The Council of the Celtic Society having intrusted me with the superintendence of this volume in its progress through the Press, I hereby certify that it is, in all respects, conformable to the rules of the Society. I also take this opportunity of expressing, upon the part of the Council, their thanks to the Royal Irish Academy, for the permission to print this work from their most valuable MSS. ; to the Provost and Board of Trinity College, for access to their Manuscript Library ; and to the Rev. Doctor Todd, for facilities in the consultation of it which he was kind enough to afford. To John O'Donovan, Esq., our thanks are pre-eminently due, for the learning and zeal which he has exhibited in the editing and general arrangement of the work. In it will be recognized a further proof of the critical and profound knowledge which he possesses of the language of our country, as well as of its topography and history. The services of Mr. Eugene Curry have been invaluable, and I am happy to record that his intimate knowledge of our ancient literature has throughout the work been made available.

I cannot close these observations without tendering our warm gratitude to the distinguished artist, Frederick W. Burton, Esq., R. H. A., whose pencil has graced our title-page with a group as classic as it is Irish, and which cannot fail to excite, in every Irish mind, true feelings of pride and satisfaction. It is to George Du Noyer, Esq., that we owe the drawings of the ancient chess-king from the cabinet of Dr. Petric, which will be found in our Introduction ; and to Mr. Hanlon we are indebted for the woodcuts used there as well as in our illustrated title-page.

INTRODUCTION.

Of Leabhar na g-Ceart.

Two ancient vellum copies of this work are in existence, one in the Leabhar Leacain (Book of "Lecan") which was compiled from various other MSS., by Giolla Iosa Mor Mac Firbisigh of Leacan, in the county of Sligo, chief historian to O'Dubhda (O'Dowda) in the year 1418. This copy begins at folio 184, and ends at folio 193, comprising thirty-eight closely written columns of the book. The other copy is preserved in Leabhar Bhaile an Mhuta (Book of "Ballymote") which was compiled by various persons, but chiefly by Solamh O'Droma, from older MSS., about the year 1390, for Tomaltach Mac Donnchadha (Mac Donough), then chief of the territories of Tir Oiliolla, Coram, Airteach, Tir Thuathail, and Clann Fearn-mhaighe, extending into the counties of Sligo, Roscommon, and Leitrim. This copy begins at folio 147 and ends at folio 154 a, col. 2, comprising thirty columns of that book.

Various modern paper copies are extant and accessible, but they have been found, on comparison with the two vellum ones just referred to, to be of no authority, as they were evidently made primarily or secondarily from either of them; with several corruptions of the respective scribes, none of whom thoroughly understood the language, as is quite evident from the nature of the corruptions (or, as they fancied, corrections) of the text made by them.

An abstract of this work was published by Hugh Mac Curtin in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, pp. 173–175, and pp. 221–240. An abstract of it is also given by Dr. John O'Brien, R. C. Bishop of Cloyne, in his Dissertations on the Laws of the ancient Irish, a work which was published by Vallancey, in 1774, in the third number of the Collectanea de Rebus Hibernicis, where this abstract occupies from p. 374 to p. 389.^e The suppression of O'Brien's name in the publication of this has caused confusion. Thus, when the author says, "in my copy of the Annales Innisfallenses, I find," &c., all subsequent writers took for granted that this referred to Vallancey's copy of these Annals, whereas the fact turns out to be that the "my copy of the Annales Innisfallenses," throughout this work, refers to a compilation of Annals made for Dr. John O'Brien, by John Conry, in 1760, at Paris, from all accessible Irish, Anglo-Irish, and English sources, of which the autograph is now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, with various marginal condemnatory notes in the hand-writing of Charles O'Connor of Belanagare. In consequence of the suppression of O'Brien's name in connexion with that work, it has been quoted as Vallancey's own by all those who have since treated of the subject, but more particularly by Mr. Moore, who frequently quotes Vallancey's Dissertation on the Laws of Tanistry, in his History of Ireland, as a work of authority.

The original Irish of the present work, however, never saw the light before the present edition, and writers have been quoting from it as the genuine work of Benean or St. Benignus, who was the disciple of St. Patrick, and his comharba or successor at Ard Macha (Armagh), but without letting the public know where the best copies of it are preserved, or what real claims it has to be considered the genuine work of St. Benean.

Benean was of a Munster family, being descended from Tadhg mac

Cein^a (the grandson of Oilíoll Olum, king of Munster), to whom king Cormac mac Airt, about the year 254, had granted the territory of Cianachta Breagh, which comprised the district around Daimbliag (Duleek), and all the plain from thence to the hills of Maeldoid at the River Life (Liffey). The occasion of his conversion to Christianity is described in all the old Lives of St. Patrick, and in Benean's own Life^b. St. Patrick being at Leath Chathail (Lecale in Ulster), and having determined on celebrating the Easter of the year 433 near Teamhair or Tara, where, he knew, the Feis Teamhrach was then to be celebrated by the king and all his toparchs, took leave of his northern friend and convert Dicho, and, sailing southwards, put into the harbour of Inbhear Colpa (Colp), the mouth of the Boinn or Boyne. There he left his boat in care of one of his disciples, and set out on foot through the great plain of Breagh (Bregia), in which the palace (of Tara) was situate. On their way, and not long after landing, they went to the house of a respectable man (virí nobilis) named Sescnean, where they were entertained, and passed the night. St. Patrick is said on this occasion to have converted and baptized this Sescnean and all his family, among whom was Benean, then seven years old, to whom, at the baptism, Patrick gave the name of Benignus, from his benign disposition. This boy became so attached to St. Patrick, that he insisted on going along with him. St. Patrick received him with pleasure into his so-

^a According to the genealogies of the saints collected by the O'Clerighs, Benean, bishop and primate, was the son of Sescnean, son of Laei, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilíoll Olum. See Leabhar na g-Ceart, post, p. 50, where he is said to be of the Cianachta of Gleann Geimhin, of the race of Tadhg, son of Cian.

^b Considerable extracts from the Life of Benignus have been printed by Colgan, in his Supplement to the Lives of St. Patrick, Trias Thaum, p. 203. From these it would appear that the Life was in Irish, and translated into Latin by Colgan, who intended publishing it at the 9th of November. There is an Irish Life of this saint in the Burgundian Library at Brussels, according to Mr. Bindon's Catalogue of the Irish MSS. in that Library, printed in the Proceedings of the R. I. A., vol. iii. p. 485.

ciety, and Benignus thenceforth became one of his most favorite disciples. According to the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, however, the apostle met Sesenean when he first landed at Inis Phadruig, near Dublin (lib. i. c. 45); but Doctor Lanigan thinks that this date is contradicted by the whole tenor of St. Patrick's proceedings. Be this as it may, we are informed in one of the chapters of the Life of St. Benignus, which Colgan has published in his Trias Thaum., p. 205, that when he became qualified to preach the Gospel, he was employed in various parts of Ireland, and particularly in those regions which St. Patrick had not visited in person. Among these is particularly mentioned "Iar Momonia", or West Munster, and "Corcomrogia" Corcumruadh (Corecomroe, in the county of Clare). But he became in a special manner the patron of Connacht, where he erected his principal church, called in the time of the writer Cill Benein, at Dun Lughaidh, in the territory of Conmaicne Chineil Dubhain ("Kilbanan" in the barony of Dunmore and county of Galway, where the remains of a round tower still indicate the ancient importance of the place); and it is added that he blessed the province of Connacht "from the River Droghaeis to Muirease Eoghain near Luimneach, and from Leim Lara to Druim Snamha in the district of Gabhal Liuin" (Galloon, at Lough Erne), in which region the inhabitants paid him and his successors, yearly, "laeticiniorum, vitulorum, agnorum, idque generis animantium primitias."—Trias Thaum., c. 32, p. 205.

But the relatives of St. Benignus, to wit, the race of Eoghan of Caiséal, the descendants of "Oilioll Olum," and other Munster tribes, hearing that he had blessed the province of Connacht in preference to Munster, of the royal stock of which he was himself descended, though St. Patrick wished him to bless the south, were in no small degree offended; but St. Benignus, to make some amends for this obvious dereliction of provincial duty, commenced and composed that famous Chronicon, called the Psalter of Caiseal^c, in which are described the acts, laws, prerogatives, and succession, not only of the monarchs of all Ireland, but also those of the kings of Munster.

The passage runs as follows in the Latin of Colgan:—

“Cognati Sancti Benigni, vt populus Eoganiæ Casselensis, Olildiana progenies, et alij Momonienses, audito prædicto eius facto, non parum offensi et contra virum Dei indignati dicuntur. S. autem Benignus, vt istam offensam aliquo grato dilueret obsequio, famosum illud Chronicon, quod Psalterium Casselense nuncupatur, inchoavit et composuit: in quo non solùm totius Hiberniæ Monarcharum, sed specialiter regum Mumoniæ acta, jura, prærogativæ, et successio conscribantur.”—Trius Thaum., c. 33, p. 205.

Benignus afterwards, in 455, upon St. Patrick's retirement, succeeded him, and, having himself resigned his bishopric in 465, died on the 9th of November, 468, and was buried at Ard Macha (Armagh)^d.

The passage, which we have just cited out of Colgan's extracts from the Life of St. Benignus, has been overlooked by our writers. It es-

^c It is usually supposed that this work was called Psalter because it was principally written in verse. Doctor Lanigan, however, informs us (Ecccl. Hist. vol. iii. p. 356, note 58), that “his deceased worthy friend, General Vallancey,” informed him that this was a mistake, as the original title of the work was Saltair, “which, he said, signifies chronicle; and that he states the same in his Prospectus of a Dictionary of the ancient Irish, at Taircae.” Dr. Lanigan, however, though he would wish to agree with Vallancey in everything, was too profound a scholar to be led astray by his veneration for the memory of his departed friend, and, too honest to pass any opinion without some authority, he had the courage to add:

“Yet Saltair signifies also Psalter, and the Psaltair, or Saltair-na-rann, was not a chronicle.”

^d Dr. Lanigan remarks (vol. i. p. 377): “How a story about Benignus having died at Rome, got into the Annals of Innisfallen, I cannot discover.” The Doctor was not aware that what he quotes throughout his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, as the Annals of Innisfallen, is only a compilation made at Paris, A. D. 1760, from old Irish stories, the Cuithreim Thoirdhealbhagh, Giraldus Cambrensis, Penbridge's Annals, and Ware's Annals, by John Conry and Dr. O'Brien, author of the Irish Dictionary. We are indebted to the Irish Archaeological Society for this discovery.

tablishes the important fact that Benean commenced (inchoavit) the celebrated Psalterium Casselense; and as it is a matter of extreme interest to examine the existing evidence as to that record, of which only a small fragment is known to exist, we shall collect what can be stated respecting it in a subsequent part of this Introduction.

That passage further proves that Benean put together and entered in the Psalter an account of the rights (jura) of the monarchs of all Ireland, and especially of the kings of Munster. Now, one of the poems in our book, in treating of those rights says (p. 52), that Benean put in the Psalter of Caiseal the history of each Munster king, and his income; and the conclusion reasonably follows that Benean commenced and composed some such Book of Rights as this, and placed it in the Saltair Chaisil.

Edward O'Reilly (in his Irish Writers, p. 28), saw the fallacy of attributing the authorship of the Book of Rights, in its present form, to St. Benean, and expressed his doubts as to the fact, as the "language, and some internal evidences in the composition, show it to be at least enlarged and altered in a period nearer to our own times." In fact, though it cannot be denied that there was a Leabhar na g-Ceart drawn up after the establishment of Christianity, which received the sanction of St. Benignus, it cannot be pronounced that any part of the work, in its present form, was written by that bishop.

It gives an account of the rights of the monarchs of all Ireland, and the revenues payable to them by the principal kings of the several provinces, and of the stipends paid by the monarchs to the inferior kings for their services. It also treats of the rights of each of the provincial kings, and the revenues payable to them from the inferior kings of the districts or tribes subsidiary to them, and of the stipends paid by the superior to the inferior provincial kings for their services.

These accounts are authoritatively delivered in verse, each poem being introduced by a prose statement; and of those joint pieces, twenty-one in number, seven are devoted to Munster, and the rights of the úrō rīg, or monarch of all Ireland, are treated of under this head; for it first supposes the king of Munster to be the monarch, and then subjoins an account of his rights, when he is not king over all Ireland. Two pieces are then devoted to the province of Connacht, two to each of the three divisions of Ulster, two to Midhe or Meath, and two to Leinster, with an additional poem on the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, and a concluding piece on the rights of the kings at Teamhair or Tara.

The prose usually purports to be a short statement or summary of the poem which follows, and which it treats as a pre-existing document. These prose introductions almost uniformly conclude with an allegation that Bencan said or sang as follows, de quibus Bencan dixit, . . . amail ad fear Bénéan . . . ad beart . . . no cheart . . . no cácaim . . . nor ríó . . . fo gní . . . no can Bénéan; see pp. 32, 42, 52, 62, 70, 80, 88, 98, 112, 118, 128, 136, 144, 156, 168, 176, 184, 204, 218, 224, 238. Some of them go farther, and call him m τ-úgōap, the author, p. 32, and m ríli, the poet, p. 70. Nor is this direct allegation of Bencan's authorship confined to the concluding prose lines; it occurs in an opening at p. 97, and it is put almost as strongly at p. 50, iríao ro beor zecurca Bénéan, "these are, further, the inculcations, or instructions of Bencan;" and the introduction to the whole work in the Book of Baile an Mhuta, p. 30 (which has not a corresponding passage in the Book of Leacan), uses an expression but slightly different . . . amail ro ópōaig Bénéan, i. e. "the tribute and stipends of Ireland as Bencan ordained," . . . and it refers to the Book of Gleann da Loch as the authority.

Now, it is curious that the poems themselves, in general, do not profess to be the productions of Bencan; and the additional rann or stanza at p. 68, infra (which is only found in the Book of Leacan), can scarcely be viewed as an exception to this. On the internal evidence of the poems, as to the authorship of them, it will become very clear that he was not the author; and those who have "fathered" the Book on St. Benean, to use O'Reilly's expression (Ir. Writ. p. 109), must have confined their reading to the prose.

It will appear upon careful consideration that most of the stipends and tributes mentioned in Leahhar na g-Ceart were traditional, and many of them of great antiquity. The tributes of Midhe (Meath) are said (p. 184), to be related as they were rendered from the time of Conn of the Hundred Battles. It is probable, indeed, that the accounts were originally digested, and perhaps put into metre, by St. Benean; but that the work was afterwards, towards the beginning of the tenth century, altered and enlarged by Cormac Mac Cuileannain, bishop-king of Caiseal or Munster, assisted by Sealbhach the sage, and Aenghus, so as to agree with the tribes and subdivisions of Ireland at that period. This appears quite plain from the notices of Sealbhach and Aenghus, at p. 60, and of Mac Cuileannain, at p. 86.

The poet Sealbhach was secretary to Cormac, "Seluacius S. Cormaco a secretis vir eximie pietatis et doctrinae."—Acta SS. p. 5; and in the same place Colgan says that he survived Cormac for some years, and that he wrote concerning his virtues and death: "Vixit autem Seluacius aliquot annis post S. Cormacum, de cuius morte et virtutibus inter alia multa, pulchre scripsit."—Ibid. As Cormac, according to the Annals of Ulster, and to Ware, vol. i. p. 465, began his reign A. D. 901, and was killed at the battle of Bealach Mughna, A. D. 908, we can very nearly fix the date of the composition.

We shall presently find further evidence to show that the poems, in their present form, cannot be ascribed to so early a period as the time of St. Benean; but there is every reason to believe that the older Book of Rights, which was said to have been written by St. Benean, was in existence in the time of Cormac.

Now, let us look closely through these several pieces.

We have seen that the writer of the prose attributes the first piece to the gifted author Benean, the son of Sescnean; but the commencement of the poem immediately following leads to the inference that it was the composition of one who had arrived at the station of chief poet of Ireland; for he claims for the men who held that office, and wore the Taeidhean, or ornamented mantle, made of the skins and feathers of various coloured birds (Cormac's Glossary), the true knowledge of the rights of Caiseal, which, to bards^e, should be a question for ever.

In the second poem there is a similar allusion, p. 42, for the poet sings that it is his duty to record the right of Caiseal, and that it is pleasing to the king of Gabhran to find it acknowledged by his poet.

In the third piece the writer of the poem actually addresses Benean as a third person, and implores a blessing on him; asserting that it was he who put in the Saltair Chaisil the tradition or history of the king of Caiseal and of his income. That was evidently an antecedent Saltair, which the writer afterwards refers to (p. 60), as the Psalter of the God of Purity, in which he had found it recorded that Benean had remained at Caiseal from Shrovetide to Easter.

The writer of the prose, as usual, ascribes this poem to St. Benean, the son of Sescnean the Psalmist, but the poem itself furnishes internal evidence that it was not composed by him, or for centuries after his time. It refers to the cursing of Teamhair (Tara) by Saint Ruadhan, A. D. 563; see p. 53, n. ^u, infra; it mentions the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, and the duty of driving them out from Leinster and Munster (p. 54); and if those foreigners were the Northmen, such an allusion could not have been made before the eighth or ninth century. It states the great dignity and prerogatives of Caiseal, and complains that the people of Leinster and race of Conn did not subscribe to those prerogatives; and in the concluding stanza the poem requests Sealbhach the Saei, or learned Doctor, to maintain those privileges.

We have already, p. vii., mentioned the fourth piece, and its concluding verse, p. 68, wherein Bencan is made to speak in the first person.

The fifth poem refers to Bencan as the one who had shaped the stipends of Caiséal, and it does not say that he wrote the piece.

Again, in the sixth poem, which begins at p. 80, and ends at p. 87, distinct mention is made of Mac Cuileannain himself, from which we must conclude that these poems were written during his time, and indeed possibly this particular poem was written by himself, for the writer pledges the support of Mac Cuileannain to the sage or ollamh who maintains the system he is expounding, as it is.

Again, the poem which begins on p. 98, and ends on p. 111, plainly betrays a later age by mentioning (see p. 107, infra) the free tribe of "Siol Muircadhaigh," for the progenitor of this tribe, Muireadhach Muilleathan, king of Connacht, died, according to the Four Masters, in the year 700, rectè 701 (see Tribes and Customs of Ui Maine, p. 73, note f), and of course was unknown to Bencan, though the prose, as usual, attributes the composition to him. He died in the year 468, i. e. 233 years before the ancestor whose race is mentioned in the poem. The language of the poem is, however, very different from the prose, and in its concluding rann the writer plainly distinguishes himself as the follower of Bencan, not Bencan himself, as follows:

"Well has Bencan exactly found
This knowledge—it is no injustice,
I shall state it as it is,
Ye noble people, hear it!"

The mention of Leath Chathail in the poems on Uladh, pp. 164 and 172, is decisive to show that they could not have been written by Benean in the fifth century. We have shown (p. 165, n. ^f) that an ancestor of Cathal, from whom the territory took its name, was slain in the year 627. In the splendid volume on the Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Down, Connor, and Drogheda, by the Rev. Mr. Reeves, pp. 201, 257, n. ^u, and 365, n. ^x, now published, the reader will find the materials for fixing the era of this Cathal to the middle of the eighth century, and of the adoption of the territorial name to the middle of the ninth, A. D. 850.

So, the frequent references to the Galls, and to Tomar, as prince of Dublin, pp. 41, 206, demonstrate that the poems in which they occur could not have been written before the end of the ninth century, as will appear from a subsequent part of this Introduction.

The writer of the poem, at p. 134, says that he had found the history of the race of Niall in books where Benean's faithful hand had traced it, making it as plain as language can, that the writer composed his poem founded upon previous books of which Benean was author.

The allusions to Benean at pp. 155, 168, 178, all are to the like effect; that at p. 168 speaks of Benean as having inculcated the matter in his day, i. e., as if he were then dead; and that at p. 178, when it alleges that a Latin scholar had fully observed the right, must mean, either that Benean had composed his book in Latin, or that some other Latin scholar had intervened, and written on the subject in Latin.

The language of the poem which commences at p. 204, is remarkable; viz., that "Benean related the right of the king of Laighin; in the decision of an author he found it;" intimating the writer's testimony that Benean had recorded this right in conformity with the judgment of a previous author.

Even the poem on the Galls of Ath Cliath does not purport to be written by Benean; for the writer says:

"The profits of Ath Cliath I will not conceal,
As Benean has fixed them."

This poem on the Galls or foreigners of Dublin, pp. 224, &c., and their conversion to Christianity by St. Patrick, may possibly have been produced about the same period of Cormac Mac Cuileannain, though it is difficult to believe that it was allowed to be transcribed into the Sal-tair Chaisil by Cormac and his secretary, who, living so near the period of the first Northman or Danish settlement in Dublin, could not be supposed to lend their authority to such a story.

It is much more likely that this poem was written and circulated at a much later period, when the Christian Danes refused to submit to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction or authority of Armagh; and when it was found useful by the Danish party to have it believed that their ancestors had been settled in Dublin as early as the fifth century, and converted to Christianity by St. Patrick, immediately after his having cursed Teamhair or Tara. The Danes of Dublin, on that occasion, placed themselves under Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury; and the jealousy that existed between the two races at that period is manifest from the letter addressed to Ralph, Archbishop of Canterbury, by the clergy and burgesses of Dublin, published by Ussher (Syllog. No. 40), in which they tell him that the bishops of Ireland, and most of all the one who resided at Armagh, entertained a very great jealousy against them. “Sciatis vos reverâ, quod Episcopi Hiberniæ maximum zelum erga nos habent et maximè ille Episcopus qui habitat Ardinachæ; quia nos nolumus obedire ordinationi, sed semper sub vestro dominio esse volumus.”

How early this Ibero-Danish fignent was copied, as an authentic document, into the historical books of the nation, it is now difficult to determine, but it is quite obvious it had found its way into Leabhar na g-Ceart long before the period of the compilation of the Books of Leacan and Ballymote, for it had been interpolated in the MSS. from which the copies as they now stand were made.

This fiction also attempts to pull down the veneration for the Ne-potes Neill, by making St. Patrick curse the monarch of that race, from which it looks probable that some of the rival race of Oilioll Olum had a hand in the production of it; for it certainly was intended to raise the dignity of Caiseal above that of Teamhair, and to exalt the race of Oilioll Olum above that of Conn of the Hundred Battles. As this controversy respecting the claims of the northern and southern Irish kings to supremacy and renown gave origin to a great number of Irish poems by Tadhg Mac Daire (Teige Mac Dary) and the Munster poets, which were replied to by Lughaidh O'Clery (Lewy O'Clery) and the northern literati, the Editor will offer a few thoughts on the subject in this place. See O'Reilly's Irish Writers, p. 149, under the year 1600.

Dr. O'Brien appears, from various notices throughout his Irish Dictionary, to have thought that the race of Oilioll Olum never submitted to the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles; for he speaks of Conn himself, and of his grandson Cormac, and even of Flann Sionna, who defeated Cormac mac Cuileannain in 908, as kings of Meath, and of the two northern provinces. But in this and other respects Dr. O'Brien has been led to make assertions relative to the Irish monarchs which cannot stand the test of true criticism, for though it must be acknowledged that the Irish monarchs had little influence in Leath Mhõgha, or the southern half of Ireland, still we must believe that since the introduction of Christianity the Irish monarchs were principally of the race of Niall of the Nine Hostages, the ancestor of the O'Neills and their correlative families. In the ancient Lives of St. Patrick it is stated that when the Irish apostle came to Aileach, he predicted that sixteen of the race of Eoghan, the son of Niall, would become kings of all Ireland; and though we need not believe in this as a prediction, it is reasonable to conclude that those kings were well known and acknowledged; and the fact is that they are mentioned and called kings of all Ireland even by the Munster writers themselves, whatever authority they may have exercised over the chieftains of Munster. Connell Mageoghegan, in his translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, gives us his idea of what was understood by "King of Ireland," in the following observation under the reign of Mael na m-Bo, ancestor of the family of Mac Murchadha of Leinster :

"A. D. 1041. Dermott Mac Moylenemo was king nine years.

"The kings or chief monarches of Ireland were reputed and reckoned to be absolute monarches in this manner: If he were of Leath Con, or Con's halfe in deale, and one province of Leath Moye, or Moy's halfe in deale, at his command, he was coumpted to be of sufficient power to be king of Taragh, or Ireland; but if the party were of Leath Moye, if he could not command all Leath Moye and Taragh with the lordshipp thereunto belonging, and the province of Ulster or Connought (if not both), he would not be thought sufficient to be king of all Ireland. Dermott Mac Moylenemo could command Leath Moye, Meath, Connought, and Ulster; therefore, by the judgement of all, he was reputed sufficient monarch of the whole."

According to the old Annals of Innisfallen none of the kings of Cai-seal or Munster attained to the monarchy of all Ireland, since the introduction of Christianity, except the five following: "1. Oengus, son of Nadfraech; 2. Eochaidh, son of Oengus, son of Nadfraech; 3. Cathal, son of Finguine; 4. Felim, son of Crimthann; 5. Brian, son of Cinn-eide." Of these the first was contemporary with St. Patrick, but there seems to be no authority for making him monarch of all Ireland, except this Munster chronicle, which was compiled in the monastery of Innisfallen. According to the Book of Leacan, Laeghaire, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages, was monarch of Ireland for thirty years after the arrival of St. Patrick, and, according to all authorities, Laeghaire was succeeded by his relative, Oilioll Molt, son of Dathi, and Oilioll was succeeded by Laeghaire's own son, Lughaidh, who died, according to the Annals of Tighearnach, in the year 508. After the death of Lughaidh there was an interregnum of five years, and the Munster annalist seems to have taken the opportunity of this interregnum, which was acknowledged by the UiNeill annalists, of placing the monarchical crown on the head of Eochaidh, the son of Aenghus, king of Caiseal, and making him wear it for thirteen years after 513, when Muircheartach Mor Mac Earca, the great grandson of Niall of the Nine Hostages, had, according to the other annalists, mounted the throne.

The kings of Caiseal appear to have put forward no claims to the monarchy of all Ireland till the year 709, when Cathal, the son of Finguine, ancestor of the family of O'Caemh (O'Keeffe), and king of Munster, plundered the plain of Breagh or Bregia, and compelled Fearghal, the son of Maelduin, monarch of Ireland, to give him hostages; in consequence of which he was looked upon by his own people as monarch of Ireland till his death, which occurred in the year 742. But the northern writers do not acknowledge him as monarch, for during the period which elapsed from the year 709, when he could have had some pretension to the monarchy, till 742, the other annalists set down as monarchs of all Ireland the following:

1. Fearghal, son of Maelduin, who died, according to Tighearnach, on Friday, the 16th of December, 722.
2. Fogartach, son of Niall, who was monarch of Ireland for one year and some months.
3. Cinaeth, son of Irgalach, who was monarch of Ireland three years.
4. Flaithbheartach, son of Loingseach, seven years.
5. Aedh Ollan, son of Fearghal, nine years.

From the death of Cathal, the son of Finguine, the Munster historians claim no monarch of all Ireland down to the year 840, when Feidhlimidh (Felimy), the son of Crimhthann, king of Munster, and Niall, the son of Aedh, monarch of Ireland, had a meeting at Cluain-Fearta Brennain (Clonfert) in Connacht, where the monarch submitted to Feidhlimidh (Felimy), who was considered, at least by his own people of Munster, monarch of Ireland from that period till his death, which occurred in 847^f. From this year, however, the kings of Caiseal had no pretensions to the monarchy till the year 1002, when the great Brian Borumha mounted the throne of Ireland.

Mr. Moore, however, will not allow any monarch of all Ireland to the race of Eibhear, or the people of Leath Mhogha, or Munster, from the time of St. Patrick till the accession of Brian in 1002. This

^f Mac Curtin, in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, p. 175, asserts that this Feidhlimidh was not king of Ireland, as Cambrensis erroneously styles him, in his History of Ireland, but that he was king of Munster for twenty-seven years. But Mac Curtin should have known that this should not have been attributed as an error to Cambrensis, as the older Munster annalists mention Feidhlimidh as one of the five Munster kings who obtained the monarchy of all Ireland, subsequently to the introduction of Christianity; and it is quite evident from Mac Curtin's own account of Feidhlimidh's regal visitation of the provinces of Connacht, Ulster, Meath, and Leinster, to whose kings he made the usual monarchical presents, and from whom he received the entertainments due to the Irish monarchs, that he was considered the ἄριστος βασιλεύς, or sole monarch of all Ireland. Mac Curtin's remark, that his progress through Ireland "had success upon account of the union and amity the Irish princes had among themselves at this time," is beneath criticism; for it is distinctly stated in the old Annals of Innisfallen, that Feidhlimidh, the son of Crimhthann, received homage from Niall, the son of Aedh, king of Teamhair, in the year 824 (a mistake for 840), when Feidhlimidh became full king of Ireland, and sat in the seat of the abbots of Cluain Fearta (Clonfert); and in an Irish poem purporting to give a regular account of Feidhlimidh's circuit through Ireland, it is distinctly stated that he remained half a year in the plain of the River Finn, plundering the Cineal Chonail, and that he also plundered Dal Riada and Dal Araidhe, and that he remained a whole year at Ard Macha, during which he preached to the people every Sunday. The words of Giraldus are as follows:

"Igitur a tempore Felmidii Regis, et obitu Turgesii, vsque ad tempus Rotherici: Conaetiae regnum duravit (Qui ultimus de hac gente monarcha fuit, & vsque hodie Conaetiae praesidet: Cuius etiam tempore, et per quem Rex Lageniae Dermotus scilicet Murchardi filius, a regno expulsus fuerat) septendecim Reges in Hibernia regnauerunt."—Topographia Hiberniae, Dist. iii. c. 44.

is a fact on which he frequently and emphatically speaks. See especially his History of Ireland, vol. ii. pp. 142, 143.

It is probable that the tributes paid to the Irish monarchs and provincial kings remained nearly the same as those described in the present form of Leabhar na g-Ceart till the destruction of the Irish monarchy. After the English invasion, the power of the provincial kings was very much limited; the great Anglo-Norman families imposed various tributes unknown to the ancient Irish, and in course of time the Irish chieftains who retained their power began to imitate them, and the old order of the country was disturbed and broken.

Of this kind of exaction the following is quoted by Dr. O'Connor, from an Irish MS. preserved in the Library of the Duke of Buckingham at Stowe, Codex iii. fol. 28. Stowe Catalogue, p. 168. It appears to have been taken from a poem by Torna O'Maelchonaire, chief poet of Connacht, who attended at the inauguration of Feidhlimidh O'Conchohair on the hill of Cara Frasigh, A. D. 1315.

“These are the stipends of the royal chieftains of Connacht from O'Conchobhair [O'Conor], i. e. twelve score beeves^g, and twelve score sheep on May-day to Mac Oireachtaigh [Mageraghty]; twelvescore beeves and twelve score hogs to himself [O'Conor] every Allhallowtide, and these are levied from Ubhall^h. Twelve score milch cowsⁱ, and twelve score sheep on May-day to O'Fionnachtaigh; twelve score hogs and twelve score beeves every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied for him from Luighne Chonnacht [Leyny]. Twelve score milch cows and twelve score sheep to O'Maoilbhrenuinn [Mulrenin] every May-day; twelve score beeves and twelve score hogs every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied for him from Tir Fhiachrach [Tireragh], and from Cuil Cnamha^k, and from Cuil Cearnamha. Twelve score milch cows and twelve score sheep on May-day to O'Flannagain; and twelve score beeves and twelve score hogs every Allhallowtide to himself, and these are levied in Tir-Amhalghaidh [Tirawley] and in Irrus [Erris].”

It will be seen by comparing the stipends and tributes in this extract with the two poems printed infra, p. 99 to 111, and from 113 to 117, that the tributes and stipends paid by these territories do not at all agree; and it is, therefore, evident that they were remodelled after the English invasion.

The subsidy mentioned in the tract on Ui Maine, preserved in the Book of Leacan, as paid by the king of Connacht to the chief of Ui Maine, will also appear to have belonged to a later period, for, according to that Tract (see Tribes and Customs of Hy-Many, p. 93), the king

Some curious specimens of these remodelled exactions are given by Mr. Hardiman in his Irish Deeds, published in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xv., Nos. xiv. and xv., with the Rentals of O'Brien and Mac Namara, in the fourteenth century, and No. xxix., detailing some exactions of Mac Carthy More. The last Earl of Desmond seems to have raised these tributes and exactions to a most exorbitant extent, as appears by a list of his "rents, victuals, and other revenues," in a MS. at Lambeth, Carew Collection, No. 617, p. 212. The same collection, No. 611, contains a list of "services and duties due to Mac Cartie More from Sir Owen O'Sullevan." More of these Irish exactions will be found detailed in the will of Domhnall O'Galchobhair, who was steward to Hugh Roe O'Donnell, who died in Spain, in the year 1602; and in a paper MS. in Marsh's Library, Class V., 3, Tab. 2. No. 20, which gives a list of the rents, services, customs, &c., due to O'Duinn (O'Doyne, now Dunne), chief of Iregan, in the Queen's County, and in various Inquisitions, amongst the most curious of which is one taken "apud the King's ould castle in the city of Cork, decimo septimo die Octobris, 1636, coram Willielmum Fenton et alios," in which the rents and customs due to Daniel Mac Carty, of Kilbrittan, alias Mac Carty Reogh, then lately deceased, are minutely detailed. The following account of the duties and customs of East Breifny, furnished to Her Majesty's Commissioners at Cavan, by Sir John O'Reilly, on the 1st of April, 1585, will afford a fair specimen of modern Hibernia Anglicana exactions. It is preserved in the Carew Collection at Lambeth, No. 614, p. 162.

“By Her Majesty's Commissioners at Cavan, the 1st of Aprill, 1585.

“Sir John O'Reily sett down the limites of your territories, and the baronies accordinge the new Indentures.

was seized of the said xlvi. poodles untill the divission, which he desireth to continue possession of or els that he may be payed the said l. milche kyne.”

Of the Saltair Chaisil.

The Psalter of Caiseal is particularly referred to in the Book of Rights as the work in which St. Bencan entered the traditional history of the tributes of the kings of Munster:

Benén.—beanoacht fop in n-ge,
do pas fo a Saltair Chaisil, feanúir each rið ir a path,
ir deach imthéir tír Mumán.—Infrà, p. 52.

This passage occurs in a poem which we may take to have been the composition of Sealbach and Aenghus, to which Cormac Mac Cuileannain adds his approval, recording his direction that his secretary and scribe should preserve the privileges of Munster as Bencan had left them. In another part of the poem the same document is evidently referred to under the name of the Psalter of the God of Purity, in which it was found that Bencan remained at Caiseal from Shrovetide to Easter.—p. 60.

There is another entry in our work, in an addition to the prose in the copy contained in the Book of Baile an Mhuta, alleging that the Psalter of Caiseal had said that Bencan sang or wrote the song which follows: “hoc carmen ut Psalterium Caisil dixit.” p. 238. It is clearly a mistake to attribute that poem, at least in its present state, to Bencan; but it is not clear what particular document the writer of the prose meant to designate as the Psalterium Caisil.

Therefore we proceed to lay before the reader some information, respecting the Psalter or Psalters so called ; and this may seem the more requisite, as we have already, in giving the grounds for believing that Benean or Benignus framed the original Book of Rights, shown a most ancient testimony, proving that he commenced and composed a Psalterium Casselense, in which the rights, or jura, of the Irish monarchs, &c., were stated: see Colgan's extracts from the Latin Life of Benignus, quoted above, p. v.

It is remarkable that Colgan, who had that notice in the Life of Benignus before him, takes no notice of it, but in another place (Trias Thaum., p. 205), ascribes the writing or compiling of the Psalterium Cassellense to Cormac Mac Cuileannain. His words are as follows:

“ S. Cormacus Rex Momoniæ, Archiepiscopus Casselensis, et martyr, qui in patriis nostris annalibus peritissimus Scotorum appellatur, scripsit de Genealogiâ Sanctorum Hiberniæ, lib. i., et, de Regibus aliisque antiquitatibus ejusdem, nobile opus quod Psalterium Cassellense appellatur, et in magno semper habetur pretio. Passus est S. Cormacus an 903, vel ut alii 908.” Keating, in his History of Ireland, Haldiday's edition, Preface, p. xevi., makes a like allegation in a passage which we shall presently cite.

Notwithstanding this testimony of Keating and Colgan, who seem to have been well acquainted with the literary monuments of their native country, we are informed by Connell Mageoghegan, in the dedication of his translation of the “Annals of Clonmacnoise” to Terence Coghlan, dated April 20th, 1627, that the “Psalter of Cashel” was compiled by the order of the great Irish monarch, Brian Borumha. His words are:

“ Kinge Bryen seeinge into what rudeness the kingdome was fallen, after setting himself in the quiet government thereof, and restored each one to his auncient patrimonye, and repaired their churches and houses of religion, he caused open schools to be kept in the severall parishes, to instruct their youth, which by the said warres were growen rude and altogether illiterate. He assembled together all the nobilitie of the kingdome, as well spirituall as temporall, to Cashell in Munster, and caused them to compose a booke, containing all the inhabitations, events, and septs that lived in this land, from the first peopleing and inhabitation and discoverye thereof, after the creation of the world, untill that present time, which booke they caused to be called by the name of the PSALTER OF CASHELL; signed it with his owne hand, together with the hands of the kings of the five provinces, and also with the hands of all the bishoppes and prelates of the kingdome; caused several copies thereof to be given to the kinges of the provinces, with strict charge that there should be no credit given to any other chronicles thenceforth, but should be held as false, disannulled, and quite forbidden for ever.

“ Since which time there were many septs in the kingdome that lived by itt, and whose profession was to chronicle and keep in memorie the state of the kingdome; as well for the time past, present, and to come; and now, because they cannot enjoy that respect again by their said profession, as heretofore they and their auncestors received, they sett nought by the said knowledge, neglect their bookes, and choose rather to putt their children to learn English than their own native language; insomuch that some taylors do cutt with their scissars the leaves of the said bookes which were [once] held in greate account, and sleice them in long peeces to make measures of, so that the posterities are like to fall into grosse ignorance of any things which happened before their time.”

Now these accounts look rather conflicting, but the probability is that they are all true: i. e. that St. Benean commenced the Psalter; that Cormac continued it down to his own time, and remodelled the Book of Rights so as to state the tributes and stipends of the country, as they then stood; or, to use the words of our text (pp. 107, 169, 190), map ατά; and that King Brian had a further continuation framed to his time. It cannot be proved that the prose introductions in the present work were composed when King Brian compiled his Psalter; but they must have been written not very far from his time; for it is plain that they were composed long after the poems of Cormac's day, to which they are prefixed, and there is every reason to believe from the entire context, that they were written before the Anglo-Norman invasion, and while the Northern Galls were masters of Dublin.

Keating, and others of his day, whom we shall presently cite, mention the Psalter of Caiscal and the Book of Rights as separate works; but we must recollect that the Book of Rights stood separate in the MSS. from which we print it, and no doubt in other MSS., some centuries before his time.

The Psalter of Caiseal is constantly referred to by the Irish writers of the seventeenth century as the work of Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and as then extant. Keating (ubi supra) mentions it as the first and most important of the historical books extant in his time. The following are his words:

“Αἴγυρ ἀν μῆϊδ ἀ βεαναρ πέ ρεανῶρ Εἰρεανν ἱρ ἰνῆεαῖτα γο

ῖῖῖῖ; ῖεαῖβαρ ῖῖῖῖῖ ῖḡholmῖḡ; αἡγυρ ῖεαῖβαρ ῖῖῖ ῖḡholmῖḡ.”

Which may be translated as follows:

“As to what belongs to the history of Ireland, it should be considered that it is authentic, because it used to be purged at the Feis Teamhrach every third year, in the presence of the nobility, clergy, and ollamhs; in evidence of which remain the following chief books, which are still to be seen in Ireland, viz.: Saltair Chaisil, written by the holy Cormac Mac Cuileannain, king of the two provinces of Munster, and Archbishop of Caiseal; the Book of Ard Macha (Armagh); the Book of Cluain Eidhneach Fionntain, in Laeighis; Saltair na Rann, written by Aenghus Ceile De; the Book of Gleann Da Loch; Leabhar na g-Ceart, written by the holy Bencan, son of Sesgnean; Uidhir Chiarain, which was written at Cluain mic Nois; Leabhar Buidhe Mholing; and Leabhar Dubh Mholaga.”

Doctor John Lynch, who was contemporary with Keating, mentions these books in a different order, in his translation of Keating's History of Ireland:

“Hæc cum ita sint, et insignium etiam exterorum authorum testimoniis comprobata, si vel leviter ad ea aspicerent recentiores Angli authores, amplam profectò benè potius quam malè de Hibernis loquendi ansam haberent; et quidem amplissimam, si domestica Hiberniæ documenta legrent, et intelligerent, fidem enim illa exigunt indubitam, quandoquidem tertio quoquo anno in Comitibus Teamorensibus a regni proceribus, præsulibus, et literatis accuratè excuterentur. Et sunt sequentes libri etiamnum extantes: Liber Armachanus¹, Psalterium Casselense, a sancto Cormaco Culenano, utrius-

¹ Liber Armachanus.—It is doubtful whether this is the MS. now called the Book of Armagh, which could scarcely be called a ppimleabap pcanúpa, as it contains only some notices of the life of St. Patrick, and which was called Canoin Phadruig by the Irish. It was probably a historical Manuscript of the same sort as que Momoniæ Rege, Cassiliæque Archiepiscopo conscriptum: Liber Nuachongbhala^m; Liber Cluain Egnach Fintoni^a in Lesiâ; Psalterium Rithmorum^o Aengi cognomento Dei familiaris, sive Colideus, (Αονγυρ Céile Ὀέ); Liber Glindalochensis^p; Liber per Sanctum Benignum Seisgneri filium, confectus, inscriptus Jurium Liber^q (Λεαβhar na γ-Cearτ); Uidhir Chiaráim^r Cluanmacnoisiæ perscriptus; Liber Flavius de Moling^s; Liber Niger de Molagga^t.”

Sir James Ware also mentions the Psalter of Cashel (in his Irish Writers, at Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and in his Archbishops of Cashel, at Cormac), as extant in his time, and held in high esteem; and adds that he had some genealogical collections which had been extracted from it about three centuries before his time.

Lhwyd, Nicholson, and Dr. O’Conor (Epist. Nunc. p. 65), have all mentioned that there is a part of the Psalter of Cashel in an old Leabhar na h-Uidhri, or the Annals of Clonmacnoise.

^m Liber Nuachongbhala.—There are at least six churches of this name in Ireland, one in Mayo, one in Westmeath, one in Londonderry, one in Clare, one in Cork, and we are informed by Colgan that it was the ancient name of “Navan,” in the county of Meath. Nothing, however, remains, or at least is known to the Editor, to tell which of these places the book belonged to, or what became of it.

^a Liber Cluain Egnach Fintoni, i. e. the “Book of Clonenagh,” a monastery near Mountrath, in the Queen’s county, erected by St. Fintan. Keating elsewhere calls this the Annals of Cluain Eidhneach, and gives a long quotation from it, which treats of the Synod of Rath Breasail, and gives the boundaries of the Irish dioceses as established by that Synod. This MS.

^o Psalterium Rithmorum.—A copy of this, on vellum, is preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

^p Liber Glindalochensis.—A considerable fragment of this MS. is now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

^q Jurium Liber.—This is the Λεαβhar na γ-Cearτ, now for the first time printed.

^r Uidhir Chiarain, now called Leabhar na h-Uidhri. A considerable fragment of this MS., in the handwriting of Maclmuire, son of Celiochair Mac Cuinn na m-Bocht, is now preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy.

MS. on parchment, in the Bodleian Library^u at Oxford, consisting of 292 pages in large folio. This MS. was examined by Dr. Todd, who published an account of its contents, with observations on its age and history, in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. ii. p. 336. In the year 1844, and again in 1846, the Editor went over it with the most anxious care, to see how much of the Psalter it might preserve; and he has come to the conclusion that it contains a very considerable fragment of that work. This MS., as it now stands, consists of 145 folios or 292 pages folio, paged consecutively in modern figures, though it is evidently defective by many folios in various places. When perfect it must have been very voluminous, as it appears, from various notices of the scribes, that it contained a transcript of all that could be then read of Saltair Chaisil; Leabhair an Phreabain Chunga, i. e. the Book of the “Shred” of Cong; the Book of Rathain [Rahen, near Tullamore, King’s county]; the Leabhar-Buidhe Fearná, i. e. the Yellow Book of Ferns. It was transcribed in 1453 by Seán (John) Buidhe O’Cleirigh, and others, at Rath an Photaire (now called in Irish Ráé a’ Phozap, and Anglicè Pottlerath, a townland in which are some ruins of a castle, situate in the parish of Kilnamanagh, barony

^u O’Reilly states, in his Irish Writers, p. lx., that the Psalter of Cashel was extant in Limerick in 1712, as appears by a large folio MS. in the Irish language, preserved in the Library of Cashel, written in Limerick in that year, and partly transcribed from the original Psalter of Cashel; and he adds, that the original Psalter of Cashel was long supposed to be lost, but that it is now said to be deposited in the British Museum. The Cashel MS. here referred to by O’Reilly is a compilation made in 1712, by Dermot O’Connor, the translator of Keating, who calls it the Psalter of Cashel; but this name was given it by himself, though he never saw the Psalter of Cashel. Dishonest compilers of this description have imposed dignified names upon their own compilations, to impose on the credulity of purchasers. A copy of the Book of Ballymote, with some additions made by Teige O’Naghten, now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, II. 1. 15, bears the title of Saltap na Teampaic, i. e. the Psalter of Tara, and the Editor has frequently heard it positively asserted that the Psalter of Tara is preserved in the Library of the University of Dublin, but there are no other grounds for saying so.

of Cranagh, and county of Kilkenny), for Edmond, the head of a sept of the Butler family, who assumed the Irish chieftain name of Mac Richard. This MS. remained in the possession of Mac Richard till the year 1462, when he was defeated in a battle fought at Baile au Phoill, now anglicized "Piltown," in the barony of "Iverk," county of Kilkenny, the property of the Earl of Bessborough, by Thomas, Earl of Desmond, to whom he was obliged to give up this very copy of the Psalter of Cashel (which was then more perfect than it is at present), and also another MS. called Leabhar na Carrige, i. e. the Book of Carrick [on Suir]. This appears from a memorandum in the margin of folio 110 p. b. of which the following is a literal translation:

"This was the Psalter of Mac Richard Butler, until the defeat at Baile an Phoill was given to the Earl of Ormond and to Mac Richard by the Earl of Desmond (Thomas), when this book and the Book of Carrick were obtained in the redemption of Mac Richard; and it was this Mac Richard that had these books transcribed for his own use, and they remained in his possession until Thomas, Earl of Desmond, wrested them from him."

This memorandum was written in the MS. while it was in the possession of Thomas Earl of Desmond, whose name "Thomas of Desmond," appears in English, in his own handwriting, on folio 92, a. For a very curious account of this battle fought between the Butlers and the young Earl of Ormond, see the Annals of Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh, "Dudley Firbisse," published in the Miscellany of the Irish Archæological Society, p. 247, and the Editor's notes, pp. 295, 296.

As Dr. Todd has already published a long account of this manuscript, the Editor deems it necessary only to notice such parts of it as he thinks were transcribed from the Psalter of Cashel. It is not here intended to give the reader an idea of the general contents of the MS., for that would occupy many pages, but to show how much of that Psalter is preserved as it was copied for Edmond Mac Richard Butler in 1453.

At fol. 14, a. a., line 29, the transcriber states that there ends the part copied from the Book of Cong, called Leabhar an Phreabain. The first notice of the Saltair Chaisil occurs at fol. 42, b., where the limits of Ur Mhumha or Ormond are given.

At fol. 58, b., the scribe writes that he had then transcribed all that he found together (consecutive, or without chasms) in the Psalter of Cashel (a Saltauṛ Chaisil), and much from Leabhar Rathain, and from Leabhar an Phreabain.

At fol. 59, a. a., commences the Feilire Aenghuis or Festilogium of Aenghus Ceile De, which is accompanied, as usual, by an interlined gloss. This, which is in very good preservation, ends on fol. 72. It was evidently copied from the Saltair Chaisil. This is immediately followed by a poem headed Finghin cecinit do Chormac mac Cuileannain, Finghin sang for Cormac Mac Cuileannain, and beginning:

“Dá maó mairi bar í péil.”

“Were I a king manifestly.”

Fol. 73, a. a. A poem on the genealogy of the kings of Munster, beginning:

“Cain cúic maccu Crimthumh réim?”

“Who were the five sons of Crimthann Sreimh?”

This is undoubtedly copied from the Saltair Chaisil.

Fol. 73, a., line 16, begins a poem on the descendants of Oilíoll Olum, king of Munster:

“Clann Ailella Olum uill.”

“The sons of the great Aileall Olum.”

Between the folios now consecutively marked 74 and 75 there is an evident chasm.

Fol. 75, a. a., line 16, begins the genealogy of the race of Eir-eamhón (Heremon), undoubtedly copied from the Saltair Chaisil. "Hibernia insola inter duos filios principales Militis, id est Herimon et Eber, in duas partes divisa est." This article is also to be found, totidem verbis, in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta (Ballymote), in which it is distinctly stated that it was transcribed from the Saltair Chaisil.

At fol. 78 there is a chasm of many folios, though the modern pagination runs consecutively.

Fol. 79, a. A part of Cormac's Glossary, beginning with the word umbur pōpōpōi. The remainder is perfect, but two folios are misplaced. On the folio marked 81 is a short account of the seats of the kings of Caiséal. The glossary ends on folio 86, col. 3, where Seán Buidhe O'Cleirigh writes a memorandum that he had finished the transcription of the Sanasan or Etymologicon of the Saltair Chormaic, on the fifth day of February and eighth of the moon, for Edmund Butler Mac Richard.

Fol. 80, b. A tract on the derivations of names of places in Ireland, stated on the second last line of col. b., to have been transcribed from Leabhar Buidhe Fearna, i. e. the Yellow Book of Ferns. The matter, from this down to fol. 93, was probably taken from the Leabhar Buidhe Fearna, but from thence to folio 123 is evidently from the Saltair Chaisil. The principal contents are as follows:

Fol. 93, a. a. Genealogy of the Race of Eibhear. The language very ancient.

Fol. 93, b. a. line 29. A curious account of the sons of Eochaidh Muigh-mheadhoin, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century, and of their father's bequest to each of them.

Fol. 93, b. b. An account of the cause of the expulsion of certain families from the north of Ireland, and their settlement in the south, beginning in Latin thus: "De causis quibus exules Aquilonensium ad Mummenenses."

Fol. 94, b. b., line 17. A historical tale relating to Mac Con, monarch of Ireland, and Oiliol Olum, king of Munster.

Fol. 96, a. a. An account of the Battle of Magh Mucruimhe, fought near Athenry, County Galway, between the ex-monarch Mac Con, and Art, monarch of Ireland in the third century.

Fol. 98, a. a., line 22. Curious historical stories, in very ancient language, relating to Crimhthann Mor Mac Fidhaigh, monarch of Ireland, and other Munster kings of the race of Eibhear.

Fol. 99, b. b. An account of the expulsion of the people called Deise from Midhe (Meath), and their settlement in Munster. The language is very ancient.

Fol. 106, b., col. 3. A genealogical account of the Race of Ir, seventh son of Mileadh or Milesius. This is very copious, and the language very ancient, as is manifest from its grammatical terminations and obsolete idioms.

Fol. 111, b. a. A list of the Milesian or Scotie kings of Ireland, from Eireamhon (Heremon) down to Brian Borumha. This affords strong evidence that the Saltair Chaisil was enlarged or continued by that monarch.

Fol. 115, a., cols. 2, 3. A list of the bishops of Ard Macha (Armagh), synchronized with the kings of Caiseal. Colgan has published this list in his Trias Thaum., p. 292, as “ex Psalterio Casselensi.” It is carried down to Domhnall, who succeeded A. D. 1092, and who was living when this list was made out. Lanigan remarks, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. iii. p. 357, note 59, that some writers pretend that Cormac was not the author of this, and that it was compiled after his times; and he acknowledges that “there are some circumstances mentioned as taken from it, which belong to a later period; for instance, the latter part of the catalogue of the archbishops of Armagh (apud Tr. Th., p. 292), which comes down to the latter end of the eleventh century. But this proves nothing more than that some additions have been made to the original work of Cormac, as has been the case with regard to numbers of historical works, particularly those written in the middle ages."

Fol. 115. A list of the kings of Dal Araidhe, which is followed by a list of the Christian kings of Ireland, down to Maelseachlainn II., who died in 1022.

Fol. 116, a., col. 2. A list of the Christian kings of Connacht.

Fol. 119, a., col. 3. A list of the kings of Aileach.

At the bottom of this folio the scribe writes,

"Ḃach ní fédmair o'fagbail 'ra penlebur .i. a Saltair Cairil atá agann 'ra leabhar ro na Ráta."

i. e. "Everything we could find in the old book, i. e. the Saltair Chaisil, we have [preserved] in this book of the Rath."

From thence down to fol. 146 would appear to have been taken from a different MS.

It is quite evident from the notices in this MS. that the Saltair Chaisil was not then perfect, and that even of what was then transcribed from it the Bodleian MS. contains but a small fragment. It affords no evidence whatever as to Leabhar na g-Ccart, except the fact that the Psalter of Caiseal, in which a certain form of it must have been preserved, was continued down to about the year 1020.

Of the Will of Cathacir Mor, and other pieces introduced into Leabhar na g-Ccart.

THE rights of the king of Leinster are introduced by a piece which is called the Will of Cathacir Mor. It has no apparent connexion with the Book of Rights, save that some of the principal tribes of Leinster descended from the sons of Cathaeir, and that the rights and stipends of those descendants are treated of. Cathaeir was monarch of Ireland in the second century, and it was one of the great glories of the Leinstermen, that their kings had held that station. At a much later period Diarmaid Mac Murchadha (Dermot Mac Murrough) in haranguing his Leinster troops, is reported to have said, in reference to king Rudhraidhe O'Conchobhair (Roderick O'Conor): "Sed si Lagendam quærit, quoniam alicui Connactensium aliquando subiecta fuit: eâ ratione et nos Connactiam petimus quia nostris aliquoties cum totius Hiberniæ subdita fuerat monarchiâ."—Hibernia Expugnata, Dist., c. viii.

The king of Caiseal's right to be king of all Ireland is stated in our text (pp. 28, 51, 52, infra), as to which, and the controversy on the subject, we have already said so much (pp. xiii.–xvii.) So are the rights of the kings of Aileach (pp. 125, 127, 129) and of Teamhair (p. 177), to be monarch, i. e. the rights of the northern and southern Ui Neill. A similar recognition is given to the king of Laighin (p. 205).

Of the will of Cathaeir Mor, in the shape in which it has been edited, there are extant three copies on vellum, i. e. besides those inserted in our two copies of the Book of Rights, there is another in what is called the Book of Leinster, or Leabhar Laighneach (Leacan, fol. 92), with which the text of the present edition has been compared. Besides these we have another vellum copy, or, we might say, another will, in the Book of Baile an Mhuta (Ballymote), fol. 74, a. b. It is very different from the text which we have adopted, but evidently less authentic, being longer, and very verbose and rhapsodical. There is also a paper copy in the O'Gorman collection, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy. It is in the handwriting of Peter O'Connell, who made a translation of it into English for the use of O'Gorman, who prided himself on his descent from this great monarch. This copy, which professes to have been taken from the Book of Gleann Da Loch (Glendalough), accords in arrangement with the copy in B., but it appears, from some verbal differences, that it was not taken from it. The copy consulted by O'Flaherty, Ogygia, p. iii. c. 59, was different from any of these.

This will has been mentioned by O'Flaherty and most modern writers on Irish history, as an authentic document contemporaneous with the testator. See p. 192. But the Editor is of opinion that it was drawn up in the present form some centuries after the death of Cathaeir Mor, when the race of his more illustrious sons had definite territories in Leinster. Whether there was an older form of this will, or whether it was committed to writing in Cathaeir's own time, are questions which the Editor is not prepared to settle.

The Editor does not know of any copy of the Benedictio Patricii, save those from which our text has been printed (p. 234). But there is in Leabhar Breac (fol. 14, b. a.) a blessing of the saint on Munster, which bears some resemblance to that here given.

Dubhthach Mac Ui Lughair, the author of poems quoted at p. 236, is noticed by O'Reilly in his Chronological Account of the Irish Writers under the year 433, where it is stated that he was the poet and druid of Laoghaire, monarch of Ireland, at the commencement of St. Patrick's mission, and that he was converted to Christianity by that apostle. The reader will there find some account of him and his writings. But O'Reilly there assumes that the poem in the Book of Rights, commencing Teamaip teac a m-bi mac Cunn, is ascribed to Dubhthach; and he says that some doubts may be reasonably entertained that this poem is the production of Dubhthach. But nothing is found in our text ascribing the poem in question to him. The copy in the Book of Baile an Mhuta says that it was found in the Psalter of Caiseal.

A poet, Lughair, is named and quoted at p. 204, and called Úán fáil, or full poet.

On the References to Tomar^u as King or Prince of the Galls of Dublin.

WE have reserved to this place a discussion upon these very curious references, and they appear to us worthy of a separate consideration, as the investigation may lead to fix the exact period at which the Norse or Danish tribes settled in Dublin.

In Mr. Lindsay's View of the Coinage of Ireland, where a great deal of information respecting the succession of the Hiberno-Danish kings of Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford is collected, nothing is found with regard to the name Tomar. The royal pedigree is traced up to the brothers Amlaf I. 853, 870, and Imar or Ifars I. 870, 872, but no higher.

In our work (at page 40) the monarch, in making a circuit of Ireland, arrives at the entrenched Ath Cliath (Dublin), where, it is stated, he is entitled to a month's refection, ó maicib' Tomar, from Tomar's chieftains, and to have the king of the bounteous ford (Ath Cliath), to accompany him to the Leinstermen, viz., to Liamhain (Dunlavan).

The Galls of Dublin, within the jurisdiction of the kings of Laighin or Leinster, were liable to pay heavy tribute to him, pp. 218-220, and on the other hand the stipends of the king of Leinster to them for their services were also large. These are said to be payable oo thurc Tomar, to the prince Tomar.

The Four Masters, under the year 942, quote some lines, from which it would appear that "Race of Tomar," was a kind of patronymic for the Galls, foreigners, or Danes of Dublin.

^u Pages 40 and 220, infra.

“Ath Cliath of swords was plundered
 Of many shields and families;
 The Race of Tomar were tormented
 In the western world, it has been manifested.”

The earliest reference to a Danish prince Tomar occurring in the Irish annals is at the year 847, where the Annals of Ulster contain the following notice of a Danish prince Tomrair, which is decidedly the same name as Tomar:

“A. D. dcccxlvii. Caé pé Maelpechnaill for ḡennti i Foraiḡ, in quo cecioepunt pect céet. Bellum pé n-Olchoḡur, pí Mumian, acur pé Lorgán mac Ceallaḡ co Laiḡniu occ Sciaé Nechtan in quo cecioit Tomrair^v Erell, tanaire piḡ Laiḡlinne, acur dá céet déc imbi.”

Thus rendered in the old translation of these Annals preserved in the Library of the British Museum. Clarend. tom. 49. Ayscough, 4795.

“A. D. 847. A battle by Maelsechnaill vpon the Gentyes” [i. e. Gentiles or Pagan Danes] “at Fora, where 700 fell. Bellum by Ollchovar, king of Mounster, and Lorgan mac Cellai into Leinster [rectè, with the Leinstermen] vpon Gentiles at Sciah Nechtan, where fell Tomrair Erell, the next or second in power to the king of Laihlin, and 1200 about him.”

 Donrair. The old translator reads the Tomrair or Tomrair, see p. xli.

The same events are recorded by the Four Masters, under the year 846, as follows:

“Αοιρ Cριορτ, 846. Κατ πραιομεδ ρια Maelpeachlainn mac Maolruanaidh φορ γαλλαιβ ι φοραιζ ου ιη ηο μαρβαδ υη. c. λαιρ διοδ.

“The age of Christ 846. A battle was gained by Maelseachlainn, the son of Maelruanaidh over the Galls [Danes] at Forach, where seven hundred of them were slain by him.

“Another battle [was gained] by Olchobhar, king of Munster, and by Lorcan, the son of Ceallach, king of Leinster, with the Leinstermen and Munstermen about them, over the Danes at Sciath Neachtain, where Tomrair Erla, Tanist of the king of Lochlann, was slain, and twelve hundred about him.”

It will appear from a passage in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 994, that this earl or prince's ring, and the sword of Carlus, his contemporary, were preserved in Dublin, from which, coupled with the references^x in Leabhar na g-Ceart, and the poem cited

^w Tomrair.—Dr. O'Connor prints this Tonirair, and the name is so written in the MS. copy made for the Chev. O'Gorman, now in the Royal Irish Academy.

^x This argument is much strengthened by the fact that Tomar is called τορς in Leabhar na g-Ceart, see page 206. This term, which is also written ορς is explained “a king's son” in Cormac's Glossary, and by Michael O'Clery. Tore Tomar of Ath Cliath is then clearly the Tomrar, Earl, Tanist of the king of Lochlann, who was killed at Sciath Neachtain, in 847, and whose chain or ring was preserved at Dublin, in 994. The pedigree of Imhar, the ancestor of the Danish kings of Dublin, is given in none of the Genealogical Irish works hitherto discovered; and in the absence of direct evidence it is reasonable to assume that, as the Danes of Dublin had his ring or chain in 994, this ring or chain descended to them as an heir-loom from him; and as they are called Muintir Thomair, in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the

by the Four Masters at the year 942, it may be inferred with much certainty that this Tomar or Tomrar was the ancestor of the Danish kings of Dublin, and very probably the father of Amhlaif and Imhar, the first of these kings, by whom his sword was preserved. The passage is as follows:

“Αοιρ· Cρiορτ 994. Fáil Tomar ap apur claidéab Charlura do éabairt do Máolrechlann mac Domhnall ap éiccín ó gallaib Áta Cliath.”

“The age of Christ 994. The ring of Tomar and the sword of Carlus were carried off by Maelseachlainn^y, the son of Domhnall, by force, from the Galls of Ath Cliath (Dublin).”

This Tomar is clearly the Erla and Tanist of the king of Lochlann, slain at Sciath Neachtain in the year 847; and Carlus, whose sword was carried away by Maelseachlainn, was the son of Amlaff I., king of Dublin, and the person who was killed in the battle of Cill Ua n-Daighre (Killoderry) in the year 866, as thus recorded by the Four Masters:

“Αοιρ· Cρiορτ 866. Flano mac Conaing τiζεαρνα δρεζ uile, do éionól Fear n-δρεαζ, ζαιζεν, apur gall, co Cill Ua n-Δαιζρε, cúζ míle líon a íocpaide mo acchaid an píech Αοδα Fínnléiζ. year 942, it may be further inferred that they were also his descendants; for if we examine the Irish tribe-names to which Muintir is prefixed, we will find that the second part of the compound is the name of the progenitor, as Muintir Maemordha, Muintir Murchadha, Muintir Eoluis, Muintir Chionaetha, &c., which were the tribe-names of the O'Reillys, O'Flahertys, Mac Rannalls, and Mac Kinaws, all of whom descended respectively from the ancestors whose names enter into the latter part of the tribe names. The word Muintir is, however, now more extensive in its application, and means people or family.

Aedh had but one thousand only, together with Conchobhar, son of Tadhg, king of Connacht. The battle was vigorously and earnestly fought between them, and at length the victory was gained through dint of fighting and conflict over the men of Breagh, over Laighin, and over the Galls, who were slaughtered, and great numbers of the Galls were slain in that battle. In it fell Flann, son of Conaing, lord of Breagh, and Diarmaid, son of Eidersceal, lord of Loch Gabhair^z; and Carlus, son of Amhlaibh, son of the lord of the Galls, There fell on the other side, in the heat of the conflict, Fachtna, son of Maelduin, prince of the north (i. e. of Aileach). Mannachan, lord of Ui Briuin na Sionna was he who killed Flann, of which was said:

There was another Tomar or Tamar at Limerick about a century later. He is mentioned in the work called Cogadh Gall fri Gaedh-alaibh (an important and curious tract, the publication of which has been contemplated by the Irish Archæological Society), under the name of Tamar Mac Elgi. In the copy of that work preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2, 17, p. 359, hé is said to have come with a royal great fleet, some time after the death of the monarch Niall Glun-dubh, who was slain in the year 916, and to have put in at Inis Sibtond, at Limerick. The same person is mentioned in Mageoghegan's translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, under the year 922, where the following strange passage occurs:

“A. D. 922. Tomrair Mac Alchi, king of Denmarck, is reported to go [to have gone] to hell with his pains, as he deserved.”

This is evidently the Tamar mac Elgi of H. 2, 17.

The name Tomar and Tomrar became common as the proper name of a man among the Gaedhil or Milesian Irish in the tenth and eleventh centuries, like Maghnus, Raghnaill, Amhlaeibh, Imhar, and other Danish names; and a family of the Cineal Eoghain took the surname of O'Tomhrair from an Irishman who was baptized by the name of Tomhrar from his mother's people. This family were seated near Lough Swilly, in the county of Donegal, where they built a family church, called from their surname Cill O'Tomhrair, i. e. church of the O'Tomhrairs. This family still remains in many places in the province of Ulster, reduced, and obscure, and disguised under the anglicized name of Toner or Tonry.

Of the Tract prefixed to the Book of Rights, entitled " Geasa agus Buadha Riogh Eireann."

THE Tract on the Geasa and Urghartha, and the Buadha and Adha,—i.e., as we have rendered the words, the Restrictions and Prohibitions, and the Prerogatives of the Kings of Eire or Ireland,—is curious for the glimpses which it affords into the notions that prevailed in this country in the eleventh century, in the time of Cuan O'Lochain.

Cuan O'Leochan or O'Lothchain, as he is sometimes called, or, as the name is more generally spelt, O'Lochain, was chief poet to Maelseachlainn (Malachy) II., monarch of Ireland, who died in 1022. After the death of this monarch there was an interregnum of twenty years, and we are informed that Cuan O'Lochain and Corcran Cleireach were appointed governors of Ireland; but Cuan did not long enjoy this dignity, for he was slain in Teabhtha (Teffia), A. D. 1024. Mr. Moore states, in his History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 147, that "for this provisional government of Cuan he can find no authority in any of our regular annals;" and it is certain that no authority for it is found in any of the original Irish annals, nor even in the Annals of the Four Masters; but the fact is stated as follows in Mageoghegan's translation of the "Annals of Clonmacnoise" [Chlain mic Nois], a work which professes to be a faithful version of the original, although in some instances it has been obviously interpolated by the translator.

"A. D. 1022. After the death of king Moyliseaghlyn, this kingdom was without a king twenty years, during [a portion of] which time the realm was governed by two learned men, the one called Cuan O'Lochan, a well learned temporall man and chiefe poet of Ireland, the other Corcran Cleireagh, a devoute and holy man that was [chief] anchorite of all Ireland, whose most abiding was at Lismore. The land was governed like a free state and not like a monarchie by them.

“A. D. 1024. Cuan O’Loghan, prime poet of Ireland, a great chronicler, and one to whom, for his sufficiencie, the causes of Ireland were committed to be examined and ordered, was killed by one of the land of Teaffa; after committing of which evill fact there grew an evill scent and odour of the party that killed him, that he was easily known among the rest of the land. His associate Corkran lived yett, and survived him for a long time after.”

The death of Cuan O’Lochain is also recorded by Tighearnach, who died in the year 1088, and who may have seen him in his youth. His death is also entered in the Dublin and Bodleian copies of the Annals of Ulster as follows:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan h-Ua Zoiccán pprímicep Eirínn do mairbhad i (o)-Teáfa d’ fcaraid Teáfa féin: brénaic a n-aen uap in luét po mairb: firt file mpein.”

Thus translated by Dr. O’Conor, who has sadly mangled, if not falsified, many curious passages in the Irish annals:

“Cuan O Lothcan, præcipuus sapiens Hiberniæ occisus in Teffia. Judicium vâh cecidit in eos qui eum occiderunt.”

But the old translator of the Annals of Ulster, who was infinitely better acquainted with the Irish language than Dr. O’Conor, paraphrases it as follows, evidently from a text different from the two above referred to:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan O’Lochan, archpoet of Ireland [was] killed treacherously by the men of Tehva, ancestors of [the] Foxes; they stunk after, whereby they got the name of Foxes, a miracle shewed of the poett.”

The notice of the killing of him, and the consequent visitation upon the murderers, is thus given in the Annals of Kilronan:

“A. D. 1024. Cuan Ua Zócam .i. ppím-éizepp Epenh, vo mápbáð la Teépa. Óo mígne Dia míte píleð co follur ap an luçt no mápb, óir no bárraígeð a n-oroch-oiçeð íað, 7 ní no h-aðnaiceð a (ç)-cuípp çur íoçuil íoeil 7 íoluamám íað.

“A. D. 1024. Cuan Ua Lochain, chief poet of Ireland, was killed by the Tefians. God wrought a miracle for the poet manifestly upon the party who killed him, for they met their deaths in a tragical manner, and their bodies were not interred until the wolves and birds preyed upon them.”

For a brief account of the poems ascribed to O'Lochain the reader is referred to O'Reilly's Irish Writers, pp. 73, 74. The first poem there mentioned has since been published in Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xviii. pp. 143.

Charles O'Connor of Belanagare, in an anonymous pamphlet written by him in 1749, against Sir Richard Cox's Appeal on the Behaviour of Dr. Charles Lucas, writes as if he had in his possession some MSS. of Cuan O'Lochain. It appears from the Memoirs of his Life and Writings, written by his grandson, the late Dr. Charles O'Connor, p. 211, that Mr. O'Connor would never have acknowledged this pamphlet to be his production, were it not that his correspondence with Reilly, the publisher of it, obliged him to acquiesce. In this pamphlet Mr. O'Connor says:

“What I have advanced on this subject I have extracted from our ancient MSS., the only depositories of the form of our ancient constitution, and particularly from the MSS. of Cuan O'Loghan, who administered the affairs of Ireland on the death of Malachy II. Anno Domini 1022.”

Having premised thus much with regard to the author of the poem, we may now say something as to the subject of the tract; and first of the words used.

Ἐερα: in the Sing., Nom. ἔειρ, Gen. ἔειρε (fem).—This word is in common use in the sense of conjuration or solemn vow; κυριμ pá ἔεραυ ἔύ, “I conjure thee,” is a common saying.—See tale of Deirdre, in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Dublin, p. 23, where O’Flanagan translates it “solemn vow,” and “injunctions,” in a note on the word. In this tract, however, the word is clearly used to denote “anything or act forbidden, because of the ill luck which would result from its doing:” “Aruspex vetuit ante brumam aliquid novi negotii accipere.”—Terence. It also means a spell or charm.

It is used here as the opposite or antithesis of βυαῶα, and synonymous with Ἐρχαρεα: O’Reilly gives a word υπρχαρε (s. m.), which he explains, “bad luck, misfortune, fatality;” but this word is rather to be formed from the verbal noun υπρχαρεῶ (mas.), signifying prohibition, interdiction, hindrance; see also εαρχαρεῶ, in O’Clerigh’s Glossary of ancient Irish words. It is used here as the antithesis of ἔῶα.

Ἐυαῶα: in the Sing. βυαῶ (fem.) This is still the living Irish word for victory. When applied to plants or herbs in medical MSS. it denotes virtue, power, &c. See the Battle of Magh Rath, pp. 84, 85, 280, where the three victories or remarkable events of the battle are called ἐπί βυαῶα ἢ ἄεθα; and see p. 239, infra, where it is translated “gift”.

Ἐῶα: in the Sing., Nom. ἔῶ., Gen. ἔῶα (mas.) In a MS. in Trinity College, Dublin, II. 3, 18, this is explained by βυαῶ, and it is evidently here used instead of it: the things which will insure good luck and success. The word ἔῶ is still used in every part of Ireland to denote good luck or success.

Whether the customs and popular beliefs or superstitions, recorded in this poem, had ever been drawn up into a code before O’Lochain’s time, it would now be difficult to determine; but we find a collection of the kind in the concluding piece of Leabhar na g-Ceart (infra, p. 238, &c.), where some of the prohibitions are identical with O'Lochain's. Many of those matters are clearly of Pagan origin, and the reference to the king of Leinster drinking by the light of wax candles in the palace of Dinn Riogh, shows that the poet considered some of these customs as in existence from the most remote period of Irish history, as the kings of Leinster had not resided at Dinn Riogh since the introduction of Christianity, for they deserted it for Nas (Naas) at a very remote period. The prohibition, "that the sun should not find him in his couch at Teamhair," has also reference to a period many centuries anterior to O'Lochain's time; for the monarchs of Ireland had not resided at Teamhair or Tara since about the year 565, when it was cursed by St. Ruadhan, or Rodanus, of Lothra. See MS. Trin. Col. Dub., H. 1. 15, and Vita Sancti Rodani in the Codex Kilkenniensis, now preserved in Marsh's Library, Class v. 3, Tab. i. No. 4, F., and as published by the Bollandists at 25th April; and see also Connell Mageoghegan's translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, MS. Trin. Col. Dub., F. 3. 19, p. 45, and Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 101-103. Its abandonment is also mentioned in the Danish work called the Konungs-Skuggsio quoted in Johnstone's Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 287. From these facts it is quite obvious that some of those customs were regarded by the poet as derived from the most remote periods, and that the observance of them in his own time was reckoned absolutely necessary to the welfare of the monarch and the provincial kings.

We recollect little in Irish history to guide us to the origin of many of the curious restrictions here recorded; but it is quite obvious that some of them have arisen from precaution, others from a recollection of mischances. Look at the following restrictions of the monarch of Ireland:

To alight on a Wednesday in Magh Breagh; to traverse Magh Cuil-linn after sunset; to incite his horse at Fan-Chomair; to go on Tuesday into North Teabhtha; to go on a ship upon the water the day after Bealltaine (May day).

Such restrictions are not without parallels in the observances of other nations, and there are many maxims of a similar kind known to prevail even among wealthy classes in the present day, to an extent that is seldom acknowledged. The prohibition against beginning any new undertaking on a Friday is quite a geis of the class mentioned in our text. The prohibition against sitting down to dinner, thirteen at table, is particularly remarkable, and every shift is commonly made to avoid or escape from it, with a real apprehension that, if the fatal number be complete, one of the party will surely die within the twelvemonth. So the prohibition that the bridegroom's mother shall not go to church with the bridal party is strictly submitted to; she must not be present at the marriage ceremony anywhere—at church or at home; and though the parties concerned be in the habit of calling such beliefs “superstitious,” yet, when it comes to the point in this matter in their own case, it will be found that the geis will not be violated.

Addison, in the Spectator, has a paper relevant to this point, in which he adduces curious instances of English superstitions, and tracts of the present day are not wanting, giving particular evidence on the same subject.

Observances of a like nature were common among the Pagan nations of what is considered classical antiquity, as we learn from their writers:

“ Sæpè malum hoc nobis, si mens non læva fuisset,

De caelo tactas memini prædicere quercus.

“ Ipsa dies alios alio dedit ordine Luna

Felices operum: quintam fuge; pallidus Orcus

Eumenidesque satæ ; tum partu Terra nefando
 Cæumque Iapetumque creat, sævumque Typhœa, Et conjuratos cælum rescindere fratres."—Id. Georg. i. 280.

The origin of the adha or buadha may be similarly accounted for. Some of them savour strongly of Pagan notions.

On the Division of the Year among the ancient Irish.

As the seasons of the year are frequently mentioned in this book, it will be well here to add a few words on the divisions of the year among the ancient Irish. Dr. O'Connor has attempted to show, in his Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores, Epistola Nuncupatoria, lxxi. et seq., and in the Stowe Catalogue, vol. i. p. 32: 1. That the year of Pagan Irish was luni-solar, consisting, like that of the Phœnicians and Egyptians, of 365 days and six hours: 2. That it was divided by them, as it is at present into four ratha or quarters, known by the names of Samh-ratha, Foghmhar-ratha, Geimh-ratha, and Iar-ratha, now corruptly Earrach, or summer, autumn, winter, and spring; the first of these quarters commencing at the vernal equinox, the second at the summer solstice, the third at the autumnal equinox, and the fourth at the winter solstice; 3. That at the beginning of each of these ratha a religious festival was celebrated, but that the periods when they were celebrated were changed by the early Christians, to agree with the Christian festivals, and to obliterate the recollection of the origin of the Pagan rites which they were not able utterly to abolish. That such a change was made he infers from a passage occurring in all the old Lives of St. Patrick, which states that Patrick lighted the Paschal fire at Slane in 433, at the same time that King Laeghaire was celebrating the festival of Bealltaine at Teamhair; which would be fair enough if the fire were called Bealltaine by any of Patrick's ancient biographers; but it is not, and therefore Dr. O'Connor's inference wants the vis consequentiæ. In the oldest Life of St. Patrick extant, namely, that by Mocutenius, preserved in the Book of Armagh, the fire lighted by the king of Teamhair, and Patrick's Paschal fire, are mentioned as follows :

“Contigit verò in illo anno, idolatriæ sollemnitatem quam gentiles incantationibus multis, et magicis inventionibus, nonnullis aliis idolatriæ superstitionibus, congregatis etiam regibus, satrapis, ducibus, principibus, et optimatibus populi, insuper et magis, incantatoribus, aurspicibus, et omnis artis omnisque doli inventoribus doctoribusque vocatis ad Loigaireum, velut quondam ad Nabcodonosor regem, in Temoriâ, istorum Babylone, exercere consuêrant, eâdem nocte quâ Sanctus Patricius Pasca, illi illam adorarent exercentque festivitatem gentilem.

“Erat quoque quidam mos apud illos per edictum omnibus intimatus ut quicumque in cunctis regionibus sive procul, sive juxtâ, in illâ nocte incendissent ignem, antequam in domu regiâ, id est, in palatio Temoriæ, succenderetur, periret anima ejus de populo suo.

“Sanctus ergo Patricius Sanctum Pasca celebrans, incendit divinum ignem valdè lucidum et benedictum, qui in nocte refulgens, a cunctis penè plani campi habitantibus visus est.”—Book of Armagh, fol. 3, b.

It is also stated in the Leabhar Breac as follows:

“Τέιζ Ράτραις ιαρ ριν κυ Φερτα ρερ Φεicc. Αδανταρ τεμιό occa ιρ in mud ριν ρερ cop na Cápc. Φεργατρερ Λοεγαυρε ód chí in τεμιό, άρ βα h-ίρ in γειρ Tempach oc Ξοedeluib; occup ní lámaó nech τεμιό o'patóó i n-Ειρινó ιρ mo lou ριν, no cu n-αδαντα h-i Tempaig ap τάρ ιρ in pollamam.”—Fol. 14, a 1.

“Patrick goes afterwards to Fearta Fear Feice. A fire is kindled by him at that place on Easter eve. Laeghaire is enraged as he sees the fire, for that was the geis [prohibition] of Teamhair among the Gaedhluil; and no one dared to kindle a fire in Ireland on that day until it should be first kindled at Teamhair at the solemnity.”

Now, however these two passages may seem to support Dr. O’Conor’s inference, it is plain that the fire lighted at Teamhair is not called Bealltaine in either of them. It should be also added that it is not so called in any of the Lives of Patrick. According to a vellum MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3. 17, p. 732, the fire from which all the hearths in Ireland was supplied was lighted at Tlachtgha [at Athboy] in the Munster portion of Meath, and not on the first of May, but on the first of November; while, according to Keating, the author of the Dinnseanchus, and others, the fire called Bealltaine was lighted at Uisneach, in the Connacht portion of Meath, on the first of May, which for that reason is called La Bealltaine to the present day. The probability then is, that the fire lighted at Teamhair, on Easter eve, A. D. 433, was not the Bealltaine, but some other fire, and it is stated in the second life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, that it was the Feis Teamhrach, or Feast of Teamhair, that Laeghaire and his satraps were celebrating on this occasion; while the author of the Life of St. Patrick in the Book of Lismore, asserts that Laeghaire was then celebrating the festival of his own nativity, which appears to have been the truth, and if so it was not the regular septennial Feis^a, which met after Samhain, but one convened to celebrate the king’s birth-day. From these notices it is quite clear that O’Conor’s inference, that the Bealltaine was lighted on the 21st of March by the Pagan Irish, is not sustained. In the accounts given of the Bealltaine

^a This is usually called triennial, as in the passages quoted from Keating, &c., above, p. 25, 26, ζαὶ τρεῖς βληθῶν; but it is every seventh year in this work, in the prose of L. at p. 6, and in the Various Readings of B., p. 272; and in the poem of L., p. 22, though the other reading there in B. makes it every fifth year, p. 273, n. ⁵⁶. See also the poem, p. 240, infra, where both copies, L. & B., have cuch peachtzmaō Samna, i. e. every seventh Samhain.

in Cormac's Glossary, and in H. 3. 18, p. 596, as quoted in Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, no time is specified for the lighting of it, nor could we be able from them, or from any other written evidence yet discovered, to decide in what season it was lighted, were it not that the first of May is still universally called in Irish La Bealltaine. But Dr. O'Connor argues that this name was applied in Pagan times to the 21st of March, and that it was transferred to the first of May by the early Christians, to agree with a Christian festival. This, however, is contrary to the tradition which still prevails in many parts of Ireland, namely, that the fires lighted in Pagan times, on the first of May, were transferred by St. Patrick to the 24th of June, in honor of St. John the Baptist, on the eve of whose festival they still light bonfires in every county in Ireland, and not on the first of May, except in Dublin, where they continue to light them on the 1st of May also. The observances still practised on May-day (which have no connexion whatever with Christianity) and the traditions preserved in the country respecting it, found a strong argument that it must have been a Pagan festival, while the 21st of March is not remarkable for any observances. The same may be observed of Samhain, the 1st of November, on which, according to all the Irish authorities, the Druidic fires were lighted at Tlachtgha. The Editor is, therefore, convinced that Dr. O'Connor has thrown no additional light on the division of the year among the Pagan Irish, for his conjecture respecting the agreement of the Paschal fire of St. Patrick with the Bealltaine of the Pagan Irish is visionary, inasmuch as it is stated in the second life by Probus that it was the Feis Teamhrach that Laeghaire was then celebrating. The words are given in very ancient Irish, as follows, by the original author, who wrote in the Latin language: "Ip ip mo am ip pu am do pu gnedh feip Tempaohi la Zoegaire mac Neill 7 la ipu Eipeann," i. e. "It is in that time indeed that the Feis Teamhrach radhi was made by Loegaire, son of Niall, and by the men of Eire.”— See Colgan’s Trias Thaum., pp. 15, 20.

The fact seems to be that we cannot yet determine the season with which the Pagan Irish year commenced. As to Dr. O’Conor making earrach, the spring, the last quarter, because, in his opinion, it is compounded of iar and ratha, postremus anni cursus, it can have no weight in the argument, because there is not the slightest certainty that this is the real meaning of the term, for in Cormac’s Glossary the term is explained urughadh, i. e. refreshing, or renewing, and it is conjectured that it is cognate with the Latin ver: it may be added that it is almost identical with the Greek ἔαρ, ἔαρος.

That the Pagan Irish divided the year into four quarters is quite evident from the terms Earrach, Samhradh, Foghmhar, and Geimhrídh, which are undoubtedly ancient Irish words, not derived from the Latin through Christianity; and that each of these began with a stated day, three of which days are still known, namely, Bealltaine, otherwise called Ceideamhain, or beginning of summer (see p. 20, infra), when they lighted fires at Uisneach, in the beginning of Samhradh; Lughnasadh, the games of Lughaidh Lamh-fhada, which commenced at Tailte on the first day of Foghmhar, the harvest; and Samhain, i. e. Samh-fhuin, or summer-end, when they lighted fires at Tlachtgha. The beginning of Earrach, the spring, was called Oimele, which is derived from oi, ewe, and mele, milk, because the sheep began to yean in that season, but we have not found that any festival was celebrated.

In a MS. in the Library of the British Museum (Harleian MSS., H. I. B., No. 5280, p. 38), the names of the days with which the seasons commenced are given in the following order:

“O Samhsuan co h-Oimele, h-o Oimele co Beltine, h-o Beltine co Bron-troghain,” i. e. “from Samhsuan to Oimele, from Oimele to Beltine, from Beltine to Bron-troghain.” And the following explanations are then given by way of gloss:

“Samhain dhó .i. rãmþuim .i. fuim in τ-pampaió ann, ar ip de ponn no bíó for an m-pleadóim ano .i. in rãmþað o ðeltime co Samþuim, acur in ðeimpeð ó Samþuim co ðeltime,” i. e. “Samhain, i. e. Samh-fhuin, i. e. the end of Samradh [summer] is in it, for the year was divided into two parts, i. e. the Samradh, from Beltine to Samfhuin, and the Geimhredh, from Samfhuin to Beltine.”

A similar explanation of Samþuim is given in H. 3. 18, p. 596, and in O’Clery’s Glossary.

Oimele is derived from imme-folc, and explained ταιθε αν εαρ-pαιξ, i. e. the beginning of Spring, or from oi-mele, sheep-milk: “Ip hu aumrip umþenn a ticc arþ caeiriuc acur i m-bleagaup coiriocch,” i. e. “This is the time when the milk of sheep comes, and when sheep are milked.” In Peter O’Connell’s MS. Dictionary, oimele is also written imbulc, and explained Feil ðriðe, i. e. St. Bridget’s festival, 1st February, which day has for many centuries been called La Feile Brighde, the older name being obsolete.

Beltine, the name of the first day of summer, is thus explained:

“ðeltime .i. bil time .i. tene þoinnech .i. dá teneð do ðníðir la h-æpp peçtai no opu co tincezlaib mópaib, 7 do lecoir na ceþra eþappa ar teðmannaib cecha bliaðna; nó ðeltime; ðel dh annm Dé Iðail; ip ann do[τ]ar feibí oime gaça ceþra for feib ðeil.”

“Beltine, i. e. biltine, i. e. lucky fire, i. e. two fires which used to be made by the lawgivers or druids, with great incantations, and they used to drive the cattle between them [to guard] against the diseases of each year. Or Bel-dine; Bel was the name of an idol god. It was on it [i. e. that day] that the firstling of every kind of cattle used to be exhibited as in the possession of Bel.” See a similar passage quoted in Petrie’s Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 60.

Bron-troghain, the name of the first day of the next season is explained Lughmasadh [Lammas], i. e. “Ταιθε Þoðamaup .i. ip ano do ἔρχομαι τρογῶν .i. ἑλθαίν πο εἰσιτέει. Τρογῶν οὐν ἀμμ δο ἑλθαίν," i. e. "the beginning of Foghamhar, i. e. in it Troghan brings forth, i. e. the earth under fruits. Troghan, then, is a name for the earth."

In the Book of Lismore, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, (fol. 189, a) μηρ τρογῶν is explained, Ζυγῆρα, Lanmas.

In Cormac's Glossary (as we have already intimated), επράς, the spring, is explained υρυγᾶδ, i. e. refreshing, and derived from the Latin ver; but it is much more like the Greek ἔαρ ἔαρος.

Samprað is thus explained in Cormac's Glossary:

"Samprað, *quarī ram īr mō Ebra pol īr m Ζαιτιν unde dicitur Sampon .i. pol eorum. Samprað oin .i. riad̄ riter Ḑriān, ḡ īr and ar mo do [έ]αιθέne α πολλη acur α h-αιρθε, i. e. Samhradh, quasi samh in the Hebrew, which is sol in the Latin, unde dicitur Samson, i. e. Sol eorum. Samhradh, then, a riadh, i. e. a course which the sun runs, and it is in it that its light and its height are the most resplendent."*

In O'Clery's Glossary, the monosyllable samh is explained by Samprað, summer. It is clearly the same word as summer.

In the same Glossary the harvest is defined as the name of the last month, οὐ'η μηρ δείξεναιξ πο h-αυμμυγεαδ, and derived quarī Fogaḡmup .i. ποζα μηρ η-Ḑam̄, the foundation of the month of Ganh or November. It has a close resemblance to, and perhaps the same origin as, the Greek ὀπώρα, for if we prefix the digamma, and aspirate the π, we have Φοφώρα. This, and the relationship of ἔαρ, ἔαρος with επράς, have never been remarked before.

In Cormac's Glossary, Geimhredh, winter, is conjectured to be from the Greek Gamos (Γάμος), and this conjecture is attempted to be strengthened by the remark, "inde [in eo] veteres mulieres duxerunt!" In the same Glossary, voce Cpoicenn, as well as in O'Clery's, the monosyllable gam̄ is explained hiems, geimreac̄ad, and it is quite evident that this, or geim̄, is the primitive form of the word, and it is cognate with the Welsh gauaf, the Greek χειμα, and the Latin hyems. The probability, therefore, is, that the terminations radh or readh, added to the simple samh and gamh, or geimh, are endings like the er in the Saxon summ-er, wint-er, though there is a possibility that they may be compounded of samh, and gamh or geimh, and re, time. There is not the slightest probability that the terminations rach, radh, ar, readh, in the terms carrach, sanradh, foghmhar, geimhreadh, are corruptions of ratha, a quarter of a year, as Dr. O'Connor takes for granted.

It might at first sight appear probable that the year of the Pagan Irish began with Oimele, the spring, when the sheep began to yean and the grass to grow, but this is far from certain; and if there be no error of transcribers in Cormac's Glossary, we must conclude that the last month of Foghamhar, i. e. that preceding Mis Gamh or November, was the end of their summer, and of their year, Ṗoḡamhar .i. do'n mír déigencatḡ po h-ammuḡeacò, i. e. Foghamhar, was given as a name to the last month. Since the conversion of the Irish to Christianity they began the year with the month of January, as is clear from the Feilire Aenghais.

Besides the division of the year into the four quarters, of which we have spoken, and into two equal parts called ḡam or ḡeim (Welsh gauaf) and ḡam (Welsh haf), it would appear from a gloss on an ancient Irish law tract in H. 3. 18, p. 13, T. C. D., it was divided into two unequal parts called Samh-fucht [ṡuēt, i. e. time], or summer-period, and Gamh-fucht or Geimh-fucht, i. e. winter-period; the first comprising five months, namely, the last month of Spring, and the three months of Summer, and the first month of Autumn; and the other the two last months of Autumn, the three months of Winter, and the two first months of Spring. This division was evidently made to regulate the price of grazing lands.

On the Chariots and Roads of the ancient Irish.

THE mention of chariots in this work requires some observations. St. Patrick, according to his Tripartite Life, published by Colgan, visited most parts of Ireland in a chariot. The carbad is also mentioned in the oldest Irish stories and romances, as in the Tain Bo Cuailgne, in which Cuchullainn's carbad (chariots), and his ara, or charioteer, are constantly mentioned. There was a locality at Teambhair or Tara, called Fan na g-Carbat, or slope of the chariot, and it is distinctly stated in the Life of St. Patrick preserved in the Book of Armagh, that the Gentile or Pagan Irish had chariots at Tara before their conversion to Christianity.

According to the ancient Irish annals, and other fragments of Irish history, the ancient Irish had many roads which were cleaned and kept in repair according to law. The different terms used to denote road, among the ancient Irish, are thus defined in Cormac's Glossary, from which a pretty accurate idea may be formed of their nature:

“Rót .i. rouz .i. ró-íét .i. mó oluar péz .i. pemitza uniuḡ animalu. Aḡáit tpa il-anmanna for conairib̄ .i. péz, róz, paíuz, plige, lám-rozae, zuad-rozae, bozar.

“ROT, i. e. ROUT, i. e. RO-SHET [a great set, or path], i. e. greater than a SET. i. e. semita unius animalis. There are many names upon the roads, i. e. sed, rot, ramhat, slighe, lamh-rotae, tuadh-rotae, bothar:

“SET, imprimis, ut praediximus [i. e. semita unius animalis].

“ROUT [ro-shet, great path], a chariot goes upon it to the fair; it was made for the horses of a mansion in medium.

“RAMHAT, i. e. wider than a ROT, i. e. an ursecur, an open space or street, which is in front of the forts of kings. Every neighbour whose land comes up to it is bound to clean it.

“SLIGHE: for two chariots pass by each other upon it; it was made for the meeting of two chariots, i. e. the chariot of a king and the chariot of a bishop, so that each of them might pass by the other [without touching].

“LAMHROTA, i. e. [it extends] between two slighes, one to the north of a mansion, and the other to the south; it was made for forts and for houses.

“TUAGHROTA [farm road], for the passage of the husbandman, a passage which reaches to a ROT, or a mountain.

“BOTHAR: two cows fit upon it, one lengthwise, the other athwart, and their calves and yearlings fit on it along with them; for if they were behind them the cow that followed would wound them.

“There are three cleanings for each. Three periods at which they are cleaned, i. e. time of horse-racing, time of cuā, time of war. These are the three cleanings, i. e. cleaning of wood [brushwood], of water, of weeds. These are the causes for which they are cleaned: on account of their dirtying of the chariot going on a journey, for dirtying of the horses coming from the fair, &c.”

According to the ancient Irish topographical work, called Dinnseanchus, there were five great roads in Ireland, called by the following names, viz., Slighe Dala, Slighe Asail, Slighe Midhluachra, Slighe Cualann, and Slighe Mor. Lughaidh O’Clerigh, in his poetical controversy with Tadhg Mac Daire, urges in support of the dignity of Conn of the Hundred Battles, the ancestor of the dominant families of Leath Chuinn, that these five roads, which led to the fort of Teamhair, were first discovered on the birth-night of this great monarch, and he is borne out in this assertion by the authority of the Dinnseanchus, though neither of these great authorities, nor O’Flaherty, who reiterates the same wonderful fact (Ogygia, page 314), tells us the meaning of discovering these roads. It may be a bardic mode of recording that these roads were completed by Feidhlimidh the Lawgiver, on the day before Conn was born, and that the people travelled by them on the next day. But old stories of this kind are found among every ancient people, and are worthy of preservation for the historical facts which they envelope. At whatever period these great roads were made, they indubitably existed, and are frequently referred to in Irish historical tales, from which their positions may be pretty accurately determined. Slighe Dala was the great south-western road of Ireland, which extended from the southern side of Tara hill, in the direction of Ossory. Slighe Asail was a western road extending from the hill of Tara in the direction of Loch Uair (Lough Owel), near Mullingar, in Westmeath. A part of this road is distinctly referred to in Leabhar na h-Uidhri, as extending from Dun na n-Airbhedh to the cross at Tigh Lomain. Slighe Midhluachra was a northern road, but nothing has been yet discovered to prove its exact position. Slighe Cualann extended from Tara, in the direction of Dublin and Bray, and Slighe Mor was the great western road, the lie of which is defined by the Eiscir Riada, a line of gravel hills extending from Dublin to Meadhraighe, near the town of Galway. See Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 205, and see the Bealach Duibhlinne mentioned in our work at p. 14.

Besides these great highways there are various others of inferior character mentioned in the Irish annals, and in the bardic histories of Ireland, at an early period. Keating mentions the following: Bealach Cro, Bealach Duin Bolg, Bealach Chonglais, Bealach Dathi, Bealach Gabhrain, Bealach Mughna, Bealach Mor, in Osraidhe [another name for Slighe Dala], Bealach na Luchaide, in North Munster. The following roads are referred to in the Annals of the Four Masters, at various years. The dates are added to such as are mentioned before the English Invasion: Bealach an Chamain, Bealach an Chluainin, Bealach an Chrionaigh, Bealach an Diothruibhe, Bealach an Fhiodhfail, Bealach an Fhothair, Bealach an Mhaighre, Bealach Bodhbha, A. D. 866; Bealach Buidhe an Choirrshleibhe, Bealach Chille Brighde, Bealach Coille na g-Cuiritin, Bealach Chonglais, Bealach Cro, Bealach Duin, Bealach Duin Bolg, A. D. 594; Bealach Duinn Iarainn, Bealach Ele, A. D. 780; Bealach Eochoille, A. D. 1123; Bealach Fedha, A. D. 572; Bealach Fele, A. D. 730; Bealach Gabhrain, A. D. 756; Bealach Guirt an Iubhair, A. D. 1094; Bealach Ithain, Bealach Leachta, A. D. 976; Bealach Lice, A. D. 721; Bealach Mor Muighe Dala, Bealach Mughna, A. D. 903; Bealach Muine na Siride, A. D. 1144; Bealach na Bethighe, Bealach na Fadhbhaighe, Bealach na g-Corrghad, Bealach na n-Gamhna, Bealach na h-Urbhron, Bealach natha, A. D. 866; Bealach Ui Mhithidhein, Bothar Mor Cnambchoille, Bothar na Mac Riogh.

Various other roads are mentioned in the lives of the Irish saints, and in the Irish historical tales, but it would be out of place to dwell further upon the subject in this place. There is, however, one road, the position of which it is necessary to fix before we can determine the boundary between Laighin Tuath-ghabhair and Laighin Deas-ghabhair, or north and south Leinster, namely, that of Gabhair. This seems to have been the name of a road somewhere near Carlow, but its exact position and extent have not as yet been ascertained. The following reference to it in a historical tale preserved in the Book of Leinster, a MS. of the twelfth century, preserved in Lib. Trin. Col. Dub., H. 2. 18, may help to fix its position, or at least direction. The champions conversing are Lughaidh mac na d-tri Con and Conall Cearnach, who are introduced as standing on the banks of the River Liffey:

“Raḡat-ra, ar Luḡaidḡ, for Belacḡ Gabhrain co n-dēcup for Deluc Smechum. Airḡ-ris [.i. eirḡ-ris] amne for ḡabuir for Mairḡ Laighen co comairrem i Mairḡ Airḡet Ros.”—Fol. 78, b.

“I shall go, said Lughaidh, upon Bealach Gabhrain till I get on Belach Smechuin. Now go thou upon Gabhair on Mairḡ Laighean, that we may meet on Magh Airgead-Ros.”

Mairḡ Laighean is the mountain of Sliabh Mairge, Anglicè Slew-margue, a barony on the west side of the Barrow, in the south-east of the Queen’s County, across which, doubtlessly, this road extended. Magh Airgead-Ros, where the champions appointed to meet, was the ancient name of a plain on the River Eoir, Anglicè, the Nore, in Ossory; and its position is marked by the fort of Rath Bheathaidh of Eoir i n-Airḡet-Ros, now Rathveagh, on the Nore.

Of Chess among the ancient Irish.

THE frequent mention of chess in this work shows that chess-playing was one of the favorite amusements of the Irish chieftains. The word fiéceall is translated “tabulæ lusoriæ,” by O’Flaherty, where he notices the bequests of Cathaeir Mor, monarch of Ireland, Ogygia, p. 311. In Cormac’s Glossary, the fiéceal is described as quadrangular, having straight spots of black and white. It is referred to in the oldest Irish stories and historical tales extant, as in the very old one called Tochmarc Etaine, preserved in Leabhar na h-Uidhri, a Manuscript of the twelfth century, in which the fiécell is thus referred to:

“Cia t’amm-reo? ol Eochaid. Ní ardaire fon, ol pé, Midir Òreğ Léiz. Cio doz roacét? ol Eochaid? Do imbire fióille friuru, ol pé. Am maié re em, ol Eochaid, for fiéill? A fionaid dún, ol Midir. Atá, ol Eochaid ind rigan i n-a cozluó, ir le m tech ata m fiécell. Atá fund énae, ol Midir fiócell nao meffo. Ní im-épaét oí gíull, ol Eochaid. Cio gell biarann? ol Midir. Cumma lim, ol Eochaid. Ros bia lim-ra, ol Midir, má tú beper mo éo-cell caegat gabur n-óubglar.”

“‘What is thy name?’ said Eochaidh. ‘It is not illustrious,’ replied the other, ‘Midir of Brigh Leith.’ ‘What brought thee hither?’ said Eochaidh. ‘To play fitheheall with thee,’ replied he. ‘Art thou good at fitheheall?’ said Eochaidh. ‘Let us have the proof of it,’ replied Midir. ‘The Queen,’ said Eochaidh, ‘is asleep, and the house in which the fitheheall is belongs to her.’ ‘There is here,’ said Midir, ‘a no worse fitheheall.’ This was true, indeed: it was a board of silver and pure gold, and every angle was illuminated with precious stones, and a man-bag of woven brass wire. Midir then arranges the fithcheall. ‘Play,’ said Midir. ‘I will not, except for a wager,’ said Eochaidh. ‘What wager shall we stake?’ said Midir, ‘I care not what,’ said Eochaidh. ‘I shall have for thee,’ said Midir, ‘fifty dark grey steeds, if thou win the game.’”

The Editor takes this opportunity of presenting to the reader four different views of the same piece, an ancient chess-man—a king—found in Ireland, which is preserved in the cabinet of his friend, George Petrie, LL D.; he has never discovered in the Irish MSS. any full or detailed description of a chess-board and its furniture^b, and he is,

^b See the line in p. 242, բօրնե օո n-α Ե-բիչեիլլաւ, MS. L—the family, brigade, or set of chessmen,—բօրնե բրնո is the reading in MS.

B. In another place, page 246, we have բիչեիլլ աւր ԵրանօւԵ Են, a chessboard and white chessmen; which words may be considered to determine the therefore, unable to prove that pieces of different forms and powers, similar to those among other nations, were used by the Irish, but he is of opinion that they were. From the exact similarity, as well in style as in material, of the original, to those found in the Isle of Lewis, and which have been so learnedly illustrated by Sir Frederick Madden, in an Essay published in volume xxiv. of the Archæologia, the Editor is disposed to believe that the latter may be Irish also, and not Scandinavian, as that eminent antiquary supposed. It would, at all events, seem certain that the Lewis chess-men and Dr. Petrie's are contemporaneous, and belonged to the same people; and no Scandinavian specimen, white. The chessking in Dr. Petrie's cabinet is of bone, of very close texture, and is the same size as the above engraving.

The Editor takes this opportunity of adding to the note on "swords," p. 32, the following extract from O'Flaherty :

After quoting the passage in Cambrensis, he adds, without any comment: "They wear, likewise, very sharp and long swords, sharp at one side only, wherefore they strike with the side only and not the point."—Ogggia, part iii. c. 39.

mens, as far as the Editor knows, have been as yet found, or at least published, which present anything like such a striking identity in character. Dr. Petrie's specimen was given to him about thirty years ago by the late Dr. Tuke, a well-known collector of antiquities and other curiosities in Dublin; and, as that gentleman stated, was found with several others, some years previously, in a bog in the county of Meath.

The feap fióille, or chessman, is also frequently referred to in old tales, as in the very ancient one called Tain bo Cuailgne, in which the champion Cuchullainn is represented as killing a messenger, who had told him a lie, with a feap fióille:

“Θα ανοβοι Cuchullainn oc imbirte fióille ocup Zoeğ mac Riangaabrae a аура féirín. Ip dom cuiréiuð-ра on, op fé, so берта брéc im nac meapairge. Заροδαιη do llécì dia fepairb fióillì don techtaire co mboi for lóp a inéinne.”

“Cuchullainn and his own charioteer, Loegh, son of Riangaabra, were then playing chess. ‘It was to mock me,’ said he, ‘thou hast told a lie about what thou mistakest not.’ With that he cast [one] of his chessmen at the messenger, so that it pierced to the centre of his brain.”—Leabhar na h-Uidri.

Again, in a romantic tale in the same MS., the feap fióillì is thus referred to:

“Ciar bo mór ocup ciar bo aipeğða tra Zoeğaire tallartair i n-oen glaic mo fip doð fainic feib tallad mac bliaðna, ocup cot nomairt eair a òi boip iarruidiu amair taruidioðer pep fióillì for taruidiu.”

“Though great and illustrious was Loeghaire, he fitted on the palm of one hand of the man who had arrived as would a one-year-old boy, and he rubbed him between his two palms, as the feap fióille is drawn in a tairidin.” See also Battle of Magh Rath pp. 36, 37.

On the Irish Text and Translation.

ON a careful comparison of the two vellum copies of which we have spoken in the opening of this Introduction, it was found that the copy in the Book of Leacan, though not free from defects and errors, is by far the more correct one, and it has, therefore, been unhesitatingly adopted as the text of the present edition.

Sentences, words, &c., omitted from the copy in the Book of Leacan, and found in the other copy, have been supplied [in brackets] to the Irish text; and the more remarkable varie lectiones have been added for the inspection and consideration of the critical scholar at the end of this volume. It has not been considered necessary to notice the omissions of the Book of Baile an Mhuta in all cases.

The exact orthography of the Book of Leacan has been preserved throughout, but the contractions have been dispensed with; and the grammatical marks, such as hyphens, apostrophes, and stops, and also the marks of long quantity, eclipsis, and aspiration, have been supplied according to the genius of the language and the most approved modern pronunciation, except in the first piece (which is not part of Leabhar na g-Ceart, though usually prefixed to it), which has been printed without these latter marks, as a specimen of the text, showing to what a small extent the dot, as a mark of aspiration, was used of old^a. The letter h postfixed to consonants (being capital letters) to denote aspiration, and the ʒ- or other consonant prefixed to mark eclipsis have been enclosed (in parentheses) to point out to the reader the addition even of a letter made by the Editor, and to distinguish at once to his eye these latter from the additions [in brackets] obtained from the second copy of the text. The reason for supplying the aspirations and eclipses must be evident to all those who understand the grammatical structure of the Irish language, for in many instances the sense of the language, and particularly the syntactical concord, is uncertain without them. The Irish text, stripped of its aspirations and eclipses, might be said to resemble the Hebrew text of the Old Testament given without the Masoretic points which determine the sounds; but the use of the Irish marks is still more important. It is true that if the language became a dead one it could be understood without the aspirations used at the middle and end of words, as, $\rho\alpha\rho\upsilon\zeta\alpha\delta$, $\delta\epsilon\eta\alpha\mu$, $\mu\eta\alpha\delta$, which might be as intelligible to the eye as $\rho\acute{\alpha}\rho\acute{\upsilon}\zeta\alpha\delta$, $\delta\acute{\epsilon}\eta\alpha\mu$, $\mu\eta\acute{\alpha}\delta$; but the aspirations and eclipses which, at the beginning of words, point out the gender and number of words, and determine the force of particles, can never be dispensed with without obscuring the sense. For example, the letter α , as a possessive pronoun, denotes sometimes his, sometimes her, and at another time their: as, if it be required to say her head, the c will have its radical sound, α $c\epsilon\alpha\eta\eta$; if his head, the c will be aspirated, α $\acute{c}\epsilon\alpha\eta\eta$; and if their head, the c will be eclipsed, α $\zeta\text{-}c\epsilon\alpha\eta\eta$; from which it is quite evident that, if the aspiration and eclipsis were omitted, the meaning of the word α could not be seen. It has been asserted that the ancient pronunciation differed from the modern in retaining the sounds of many consonants which are now aspirated; but there is no proof of this, as the same letter in the same grammatical situation is found sometimes aspirated and sometimes not, in the most ancient Irish MSS. extant; and it is quite fair to conclude from this fact, that these marks of aspiration were omitted as one might neglect to dot an i, or to cross a t, and the omission took place through the mere haste of transcribers, though sometimes perhaps intentionally, especially on those consonants which were always pronounced as aspirate, as b in the termination of the dative or ablative plural, and γ and δ in the termination $\alpha\gamma\alpha\delta$, and δ in $\alpha\delta$, the termination of active participles, or progressive active nouns. The eclipsing consonants are also equally necessary to the sense, for when they are omitted, the sense is sometimes so obscured that the meaning can only be guessed at, or discovered by investigation too troublesome to impose at all times on a reader.

^a Of the provinces.—cuicead. This word literally means a fifth part, and is translated Quintana by O'Flaherty in his Ogygia, p. 24, but it came to denote a province in Ireland, from the fact that that kingdom was anciently divided into five great divisions. See Keating's History of Ireland, Haliday's edition, p. 123-145.

Now only four provinces are recognised, and still cúig cúigeas na h-Eireann is a common expression to denote all Ireland.

THE RESTRICTIONS AND PREROGATIVES OF THE KINGS OF EIRE.

THE restrictions and prohibitions of the king of Eire (Ireland), and of the kings of the provinces^a down here.

Seven are the “urgharta” (prohibitions) of the king of Eire, i.e.:

The sun to rise upon him on his bed in Magh Teamhrach^b; to alight on Wednesday in Magh Breagh; to traverse Magh Cuillinn after sunset; to incite his horse at Fan-chomair; to go on Tuesday against north Teabhtha (Teffia); to go in a ship upon the water the Monday after Bealltaine (May-day); [to leave] the track of his army upon Ath Maighne the Tuesday after Samhain (All-Hallows).

His seven “buadha” (prerogatives):

The fish of the Boinn (Boyne) to eat; the deer of Luibneach; the fruit of Manann (Mann); the heath-fruit of Brigh Leithe; the cresses of the Brosnach; the water of the well of Tlachtgha; the venison of Nas (Naas). On the calends of August all these things reached the king of Teamhair (Tara). The year in which he used to eat of these was not reckoned as life spent, and he was wont to rout his enemies before him on every side.

The five prohibitions of the king of Laighin (Leinster) here, viz.:

To go round Tuath Laighean left-hand-wise^c on Wednesday; to sleep

he writes: “This sanctified tour, or round, by the south, is called Deiseal, as the unhallowed contrary one by the north, Tuapholl (sinistrorsum).” See also Martin’s Description of the Western Islands of Scotland, p. 20. In the Leabhar Breac, fol. 126, the word tuacathbel is used as follows:

^d Geim.—A part of the year among the ancient Irish, comprising seven months. See the Introduction.

^e Lent, corḡair.—This, like the French carême, anciently caresme, seems an abbreviation of Quadragesima, as is cmciḡep, Whitsuntide, of Quinquagesima. It is between the Dothair (Dodder) and the Duibhlinn, with his head inclining to one side; to encamp for nine days on the plains of Cualann; to travel the road of Duibhlinn on Monday; to ride on a dirty, black-heeled horse across Magh Maistean.

These are his "adha" (prerogatives), viz.:

The fruit of Almhain; the deer of Gleann Searraigh; to drink with wax candles at Dinn Riogh over the Bearbha (Barrow); the ale of Cualann; the games of Carman.

The five prohibitions of the king of Mumha (Munster):

To remain to enjoy the feast of Loch Lein from one Monday to another; to feast by night in the beginning of harvest, before Geim^d, at Leitreacha; to encamp for nine days upon the Siuir; to hold a border meeting at Gabhran; to listen to the groans of the women of Magh Feimhin when suffering violation.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

The cattle of Cruachan at the singing of the cuckoo; to burn north Laighin (Leinster); to keep the obligation of Lent^e at Caiseal (Cashel); to pass over Sliabh Cua with [a band of] fifty after pacifying the south of Eire; to go with a greyish host on Tuesday over Magh Ailbhe.

The five prohibitions of the king of the province of Oilneagmacht^f (Connaught) here:

To make a treaty respecting Cruachan after making peace on Samhain's day; to go in a speckled garment on a grey speckled steed to the heath of Luchaid in Dal Chais; to go to an assembly of women at Seaghais; to sit in Autumn on the sepulchral mounds of the wife of Maine; to contend in running with the rider of a grey one-eyed horse at Ath Gallta, between two posts.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

To take hostages first from Oirbsean; the chase of Sliabh Lugha; to drink hot ale in Magh Muirisee; the clothing of the oak of Breice with his cloak after a rout through the Tri Rosa; a border meeting at Ath Luain (Athlone) with the tribes of Teamhair; to be on Maen-mhagh on May morning, but so as that he goes not over upon Dar-mhagh.

also written cupḡap, which is not unlike the French Cures-me. See Cormac's Glossary, voce Cinegeap.

^f Oilneagmacht was the old name of the province of Connaught, possibly the Nag-nata of Ptolemaeus. See O'Conor, Dissert. sec. xiii.; Book of Leacan, fol. 221; Tighearnach, ad A. D. 33.

ε To pay for his seat at Uisneach.—This name is retained to the present day, which is that of a hill, now usually anglicized Usny hill, or Usnagh hill, parish of Killare, barony of Rathconrath, Westmeath. According to Keating, Tuathal Teachtmhar, monarch of Ireland, in the first century, enlarged the boundaries of the ancient Midhe (Meath), by cutting off a portion of each of the provinces, and erecting a royal palace on each. According to him, King Tuathal erected a palace, and established fairs or public marts at Uisneach, in the Connacht portion of Meath, which were celebrated annually on the first of May. See Keating's account of Uisneach, where it is added (in the words of the translation by Gratianus Lucius) "Census autem, qui Regi Conacie (ut ejus imperio quondam Usnacha subjecta fuit) ex his mundiis provenerat, fuit, ut singuli dynaste qui ad mundinas accessissent, ad eum equum cum paludamentis [εαῖτ ḡ εαρραḡ] conferret." See also O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii c. 56, and the Ordnance map of the parish of Killare, on which the ancient remains of the hill of Uisneach are shewn. For ηα, qu recte 'μα λαῖḡ.

The five prohibitions of the king of Uladh (Ulster), i. e.:

The horse-fair of Rath Line, among the youths of Dal Araidhe; to listen to the fluttering of the flocks of birds of Linn Saileach after sunset; to celebrate the feast of the flesh of the bull of Daire-mic-Daire; to go into Magh Cobha in the month of March; to drink of the water of Bo Neimhidh between two darknesses.

His five prerogatives, i. e.:

The games of Cuailgne with the assembly of the fleet; the mustering of his army on the plain of Muirtheimhne; to commence his hosting always from Eamhain Macha; to send his hostages to Dun Sobhairce; "The terror of Eamhain Macha," i. e. to feast there for three nights armed before passing over the border. To pay for his seat at Uisneach^g every seventh year on taking his place, and this is also the right of every provincial king in Eire. After this these required of the king of Teamhair to make the feast of Teamhair^h; the kings of the provinces used to purchase their seats at Uisneach, and the purchase and price they paid was this, i. e. the "hero's ring" of red gold which each prince wore on his hand, which he used to leave in his drinking seat; for when these kings had eaten of the feast of Teamhair, the assemblies of Eire were dissolved for seven years, so that they pronounced no decision on debts, debtors, or disputes, till the next feast, after [the expiration of] seven years. It is certain to the kings of Eire that if they avoid their "geasa" (restrictions), and obtain their "buadha" (prerogatives), they shall meet no mischance or misfortune; no epidemic or mortality shall occur in their reigns, and they shall not experience the decay of age for the space of ninety years. The poet or the learned historian who does not know the "adha" (prerogatives), and "urgharta" (prohibitions) of these kings, is not entitled to visitation or to saleⁱ [for his poetry].

^h The feast of Tara.—FÉIR TEAMHACH. This is translated "comitia Te-moren-sia," by Colgan, Lynch, O'Flaherty, and others, but it is more truly rendered "cena Tamrech," by Tighernach, and the original compiler of the Annals of Ulster. All the modern writers of the history of Ireland assert that the Féis Teamhrach was celebrated every third year, but this does not appear to be borne out by any of the old Lives of St. Patrick, the authentic Irish annals, or the older manuscript accounts of Tara. See Petrie's History and Antiquities of Tara Hill, pp. 58, 59. See also Keating's account of the Féis Teamhrach, as established by the monarch Tuathal Teachtmhar.

ⁱ Sale, ceumdaigeaúcz, literally, traffic.

It alludes to the privilege which every true poet enjoyed of selling his own compositions. For a very curious reference to this custom see the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, lib. iii. c. 21, where it is stated that Dubhthach, chief poet of Leinster, had sent his disciple Fiach to present some poems of his composition to the princes of that province.

^k Cuan O'Lochan.—See the introduction.

^l Who closest the house.—He addresses the door-keeper of king Maelseachlainn (Malachy) II., at his palace of Dun na sgiath (fort of the shields), near the north-west margin of Loch Aininn (Lough Ennel, near Mullingar, Westmeath).

ⁿ The ready earth shall be fruitful.—It was the belief among the ancient Irish, that when their kings acted in conformity with the institutions of their ancestors, the seasons were favourable, and that the earth yielded its fruit in abundance; but when they violated these laws, that plague, famine, and inclemency of weather were the result. See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 100–103.

^o Manann.—This is the present Irish name of the Isle of Mann, which seems to have anciently belonged to the monarch

Concerning which things Cuan O'Lochan^k the sage, thus sang: †1024

O noble man who closest the house^l,
I am the O'Lochan of the poems,
Let me pass by thee into the powerful house,
In which is the monarch of Eire.

With me will be found for him
The knowledge—it will be no fiction^m—
Of his seven prerogatives of many virtues,
With the seven prohibitions of a monarch.

Let the seven prerogatives be read—what harm?
For the king of Teamhair; if he observe them
The ready earth shall be fruitfulⁿ for him,
He shall be victorious in battle, wise of counsel.

On the calends of August, to the king
Were brought from each respective district,
The fruits of Manann^o, a fine present;
And the heath-fruit of Brigh Leithe^p;

The venison of Nas^q; the fish of the Boinn^r;
The cresses of the kindly Brosnach^s;

of Ireland; but there were many places in Ireland so called, so that it is not absolutely certain that it is the Isle of Mann that is here referred to.

^p Brigh Leithe.—This was the ancient name of Sliabh Calraighe (Slieve Gorry), situated to the west of the village of Ardachadh (Ardagh, in Longford), as we learn from the Life of Bishop Mael, (Mel) 6 Feb. where it is stated that Bri Leith is situated between Mael's church of Ardachadh, and the nunnery of Druimcheo, the former lying on the east, and the latter on the west side of it. Colgan, Acta SS. Hib. 261. col. 2. cap. ix., sub fine. Possibly the fruit of the heath, ῥραεῖνεαρ, here referred to, is what we now call ῥραεῖ- áin or ῥραεῖόγα, not the berries of the heath, but bilberries or whortleberries. Some of the old Irish suppose that this, and not the heath, is the shrub from which the Danes brewed a kind of beer.

^q Naus, in Kildare, where the kings of Leinster had a residence till the tenth century, the site of which is still pointed out.

^r Boyne.—This well-known river has its source in Trinity well, at the foot of a hill anciently called Sidh Neachtain, Bar. Carbury, Kildare. It was the chief river of the Irish monarch's territory of Meath, and was always celebrated for its salmon.

^s Brosna, a well-known river which rises at Bimbrosna, Westmeath, and passes through Lech Uair (Owel), Lech Aininn (Eunell), to the Shammon, a short distance to the north of the town of Banagher.

¹ Tlachtgha.—This was the ancient name of the hill now called the Hill of Ward, which is situated near the town of Athboy, Meath. According to a vellum MS. preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 17, p. 732, the hill of Tlachtgha is situated in that part of ancient Meath which originally belonged to Munster, and in the territory of Ui Laeghaire, which, since the establishment of surnames was the patrimonial inheritance of the family of the O'Cainnealbhains, now Quinlans, the descendants of Laeghaire, the last Pagan monarch of Ireland. There is a remarkable earthen fort on the hill, said to have been originally erected by the monarch Tuathal Teachtmhar, towards the middle of the second century, where the Druids lighted their sacred fires on the eve of Samhain (All-Hallows). The well referred to in the text is at the foot of the hill, but not now remarkable for any sacred characteristics.

² Luibneach.—This name is now obsolete. It was applied to a place on the borders of ancient Meath and Munster. See the Book of Leacan, fol. 260, b.

⁴ Ath Maighne.—This was the ancient name of a ford on the river Eithne (Imy), parish of Mayne, Bar. Fore, Westmeath, a short distance to the west of the town of Castlepollard. It is mentioned in the Annotations of Tirechan in the Book of Armagh, as on the boundary between north

The water of the well of Tlachtgha' too;
And the swift deer of Luibneach^u.

Let his seven restrictions be read,—no reproach,
To the king of Teamhair; if he observe them
It will guard against treachery in battle,
And the pollution of his high attributes.

The track of an army, on the Tuesday after Samhain^v, Across Ath Maighne^w, of fair salmons;
To put ship on the water of the ships
On the Monday after Bealltaine;

On Tuesday a true king ought not at all to go Into the dark country of north Teabhtha^x;
Or traverse, after the setting of the sun,
Magh Callainn^y of the hard mountain;

To alight on Wednesday—I will not conceal it—
It is not lawful for him, on the hills of Breagh^z;

and south Teflia.

^x North Teabhtha.—In the fifth century this name was applied to the region extending from the river Eithne (Imy) to Sliabh Chairbre, a wild blue mountainous district on the northern boundary of the present county of Longford; in later ages this territory was usually called Anghaile (Annaly). The apparent reason that the monarch was prohibited from entering this territory was, because Cairbre, the brother of the monarch Laeghaire, and this his territory of North Teflia, were cursed [on Tuesday] by St. Patrick.

^y In the prose it is called Magh Cuilinn. This would be anglicized Moycullen. It is difficult to decide what plain this was, as there is more than one place of the name in Ireland.

^z Breagh.—This is usually called Magh

(the plain of) Breagh, and Latinized Bregia. It was the name of a plain in the eastern part of the ancient Meath, comprising, according to Keating and others, five triocha-cheds or baronies. In latter ages, as appears from the places mentioned as in this plain, it would seem that it was the country lying between Dublin and Drogheda, or between the river Liffey and the Boyne, but its exact boundaries are not defined in any of our authorities. Mageoghegan states, in his translation of the Annals of Clonmacnoise, at the year 778, that Moy Brey extended from Dublin to Bealach Breck, west of Kells, and from the hill of Howth to the mountain of Slieve Fuid in Ulster. Druimni Breagh, which means dorsa Bregia, would appear to be the name of a hilly part of this territory. In Mac Firbisigh's Genealogical work (Marquis of

^a The sun to rise upon him.—This ἡεῖρ, or forbidden thing, is not unlike the solemn injunction laid by Mahomet on his successors, that they should be at prayer before the rising of the sun.

^b Comar.—There are countless places of this name in Ireland, which means the confluence of rivers. Perhaps the place here alluded to is the place called Comar near Clonard, in the south-west of the county of East Meath. Fan-chomair is the slope or declivity of the Comar.

^c Before going to heaven, i. e. while alive in this world. This expression is often used in old Irish writings, as is also ἡορ cian co τιαρ αρ ceal, which means, serus in calum redeas, or mayest thou live long, an expression evidently translated by the Irish from the classical writers. See Horat. Lib. i. Od. 11., Ovid. lib. xv. lin. 868, Tarda sit illa dies, &c., and Cormac's Glossary, voce Ceal.

^f Dothair (fem.) Dothra.—This is the ancient Irish form of the name of the river Dodder, in the county of Dublin. The church of Achadh Finche is described in the Feilire Enguis, at 11th of May, and in the Irish calendar of the O'Clerys, as on the brink of the Dothair, in the territory of Ui Dunchadha, in Leinster—φορ ἔρῦ Ὀσῆρα ἰ n-Ἰῖβ·Ὀunchaḡa.

^g Duibhlinn.—This was the ancient name of that part of the river Life (Liffey) on which the city of Dublin stands. It is explained nigra therma by the author of the Life of St. Coemhghin (Kevin); so, Colgan, "Pars enim Liffei fluminis, in cuius ripa est ipsa civitas, Hibernis olim vocabatur Dubh-linn, i. e. nigricans alveus sive profundus alveus."—Trias Thaum., p. 112, n. 71. The city was and is called Ath Cliath, Ath Cliath Duibhlinne, and Baile Atha Cliath, a name shortened into Blea Cliath. The above prohibition may have owed its origin to the fact of some king of Leinster having been found dead in his bed in the district, with his neck crooked.

^h Cualann.—The situation and extent of this territory have been strangely mistaken by modern Irish writers. But we have evidences which will leave no doubt as to its exact situation, for in the Feilire Énguis the churches of Tigh Conaill, Tigh mic Dimmai, and Dun mor, are placed in Cualann. And in an inquisition taken at Wicklow on the 21st of April, 1636, the limits of Fercoulen, i. e. Fears Cualann, are defined as follows :

“ The said Tirlagh O'Foole humbly desires of his Majesty to have a certain territory of land called Fercoulen, which his ancestors had till they were expelled by the earls of Kildare. That the said territory containeth in length from Barneullen, by east and south, and Glassyn[...]kie to Polleallon by west the wind gates, viz., five miles in length and four in breadth, being the more part mountaines, woods, and rocks, and the other parte good fertile lands. Within the said territory were certain villages and craggs [recete creaghts] of old tyme, being now all desolate excepte onely Powerscourt, Killcollin, Beanaghebegge, Benaghmor, the Onenaghe, Ballycortie, Templeregan, Kiltagarrane, Cokiston, Ancrewyn, Killmollinky, Ballynbrowne, Killeger, and the Mainster.”

From this description of the territory of the Fears Cualann it is quite evident that it was then considered as coextensive with the half barony of Rathdown, in the north of the county of Wicklow, and adjoining the county of Dublin. Harris, in his edition of Ware's work, vol. ii. p. 48, places this territory several miles out of its proper locality, for he describes it as “ a territory in the east and maritime part of the county of Wicklow, comprehending the north parts of the barony of Arklow, and the south of the barony of Newcastle.” But Ussher, in whose time the name was still in use, places the river of Bray and Old Court in Cricht Cualann [Primordia, p. 846], in which it will be observed that he is perfectly borne out by the petition set forth in the inquisition above quoted, which was taken about the same time that he was writing his Primordia.

Hist. Ireland, Haliday's edition, preface, p. 42. This place is still well known. It is situated in the townland of Ballyknockan about a quarter of a mile to the south of Leighlin Bridge, to the west of the River Barrow. Nothing remains of the palace but a moat, measuring two hundred and thirty-seven yards in circumference at the base, sixty-nine feet in height from the level of the river Barrow, and one hundred and thirty-five feet in diameter at the top, where it presents a level surface, on which the king of Leinster's royal house evidently stood.

In a fragment of the Annals of Tighernach preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, Rawlinson, 502, fol. l. b. col. l. the following passage occurs relative to the burning of this palace:

“Cobtach Coelbreg mac Uggaine moir do lorcud co trichat

“Cobhthach Caelbreagh, the son of Uggaine Moir, was burned together with thirty kings about him at Din Ríogh of Magh Ailbhe, in the palace of Tuaim Teambath, by Labhraidh Loingseach, i. e. Maen, the son of Aileall Aine, son of Laeghaire Lore, son of Uggaine Moir, in revenge of his father and grandfather, whom Cobhthach Cael had slain. A war arose from this between Leinster and Leath Chuinn.”

site now occupied by the town of Wexford. It appears from the Irish work called Dinn Seanchus, that the kings of Leinster celebrated fairs, games, and sports at this place from a very early period.

^r The cattle of Cruachan.—This obviously means that it would be a lucky or success-insuring thing for the king of Caiscal to plunder the plain of Rath Cruachan, and carry off the cattle of the king of Connacht within the period during which the cuckoo sings. The Editor has not met anything to throw any light on the origin of this extraordinary injunction.

^s The northern Leinster, i. e. Wicklow, Kildare, south Dublin, &c., and part of the King's County. Meath, north Dublin, &c. were not considered part of Leinster at this period.

^t Sliabh Cua.—This was the ancient name of the mountain now called Cnoc Maeldomhnaigh, situated to the south of Clonmel in the county of Waterford. The name is still preserved, but pronounced Sliabh Gua, and now popularly applied to a district in the parish of Seskinan, in the barony of Decies without Drum, lying between Dungarvan and Clonmel.

^u The plain of Ailbhe, Μαζ̄ Αιλβε. This was the name of an extensive plain in Leinster, extending from the river Barrow and Sliabh Mairge, to the foot of the Wicklow mountains. From the places mentioned in the Irish authorities as situated in this plain, it is quite evident that it comprised the northern part of the barony of Idrone, in the county of Carlow, and the baronies of Kilkea and Moone, in the county of Kildare. The situation of this plain is thus described by Ussher: "Campus ad ripam fluvii quem Ptolemeus Birgum, nos Barrow vocamus, non procul a monte Margeo positus."—Primordia, pp. 936, 937. The author of the Irish poem called Laoi na Leacht, describing the monuments of Leinster, asks exultingly, "Where is there in any province of Ireland a plain like Magh Ailbhe?"

^z Suir.—This celebrated river, which has its source in Sliabh Ailuin, (the Devil's Bit mountain,) in the county of Tipperary, unites with the Barrow and the sea about one mile below Waterford.

^a Gabhran (Gowran), in Kilkenny.—According to Keating, the territory of Ormond extended as far as this place, but this cannot be considered as its boundary for the last thousand years, for then the greater part of Ossory would belong to Munster; but this we cannot believe on the authority of Keating, as Ossory is described in the oldest Lives of St. Patrick as the western portion of Leinster, "Occidentalis Lagenensium plaga." See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 865, 969. But it would appear that the kings of Munster claimed jurisdiction over Ossory as far as Gowran, while the Ossorians, on the other hand, in right of the conquest of Magh Feimhin, made by their ancestor Ængus Osraigheach, contended that their country of Osraighe should comprise all the lands extending from the river Stuir to the Bearbha, and from the mountains of Sliabh Bladhma to the meeting of the Three Waters, in Waterford harbour. But this claim was never established; for the territory does not appear to have comprised more than the present diocese of Ossory since the time of St. Patrick. See Keating, reign of Cormac Mac Airt.

^b Feimhin, more generally called Magh-Feimhin, was the ancient name of a plain comprising that portion of the present county of Tipperary which belongs to the diocese of Lismore. It is described as extending from the river Siuir northwards to Corca Eathrach, otherwise called Machaire Chaisil, from which it is evident that it comprised the whole of the barony of Iffa and Offa east. See Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 201; Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Cormac Mac Airt; and Lanigan's Eccles. History of Ireland, vol. i. p. 282.

^c Muirisc, i. e. Sea plain.—There is a narrow plain of this name situated between the mountain of Cruach Phadraig (Croagh-patriek) and Cuan Modh (Clew Bay), in the west of the county of Mayo. It also became the name of a small abbey situated in this plain, on the margin of the bay, from which the barony of Murrisk received its name. This name was also applied to a district in the barony of Tir Fhiachrach (Tireragh) and County of Sligo, extending from the river Easkey to Dunnacoy, and comprising the townlands of Rosslee, Cloonagleavragh, Alternan, Dunaltan, Ballykilcash, Dunheakin, Dunneill, and Ballyeskeen. It is difficult to decide which of these plains is the one referred to in the text.

^f The three Rosses.—It is difficult to decide what Rosses are here referred to, but the editor is of opinion that they are, either the district so called in the north, or that in the west of the county of Donegal.

^g Bearnas.—This is evidently the remarkable gapped mountain called Barnsmore, and locally Bearnas, in the barony of Tirhugh and county of Donegal.

^h The oak of Breicc.—The editor has discovered no other notice of this lucky tree.

Keating,—in the reign of Diarmaid Mac Fearghusa Ceirbheoil,—describes the country of the Dal Cais, which was originally a part of Connacht, as extending from Bearn tri Carbad to Bealach na Luchaide, and from Ath na Borumba (at Killaloe) to Leim Conchulainn (Loophead).

^q Uladh, i. e. Ulster.

^r Cuailgne.—This name is still preserved, but corrupted to Cuailghe, in Irish, and anglicized Cooley. It is applied to a mountainous district in the barony of Lower Dundalk, in the county of Louth. In an Irish story, entitled, Tornidheacht Gruaidhe Grián-shobuis, written by a native of this district, the well-known mountains of Sliabh Fidhit and Sliabh Feadha, are distinctly mentioned as two of these Cuaighe mountains, and the district is thus described: “Ἦρ ἀμλαῖδ ἀτά ἀν εἰρ ρῖν ἡα ρυῖδε ἡ. ἀν ἀδδέρυ αμ-τεαδ κυβραδ ἐρασιδεαδ γ ἀν ράλ-ἡυῖρ ριοβλαδ ρυλβορβ ἀρ ἐαοβ δι γ ρλέιβτε ἀρδα ἀδδρεαδὰ ὕρ-αοιβνε λάν δο ῖροζαβ ριομ-ὐβδραδὰ ρίορ-υῖρce, γ δο ζλεανν-ταῖβ ταῖνεαῖαδὰ ταοβ-υαμε, γ δο ῥολλεῖβ μῖν-ειμηραδὰ, κοῖν-ῥοζρομα ἀρ ἀν ταοβ εἰλ ὀι.”—“This district is thus situated: the noisy, froathy, wailing sea, and the flowing fierce brine on one side of it, and lofty towering delightful mountains, full of white-foaming pure-watered streams, of delightful green-sided valleys, and of smooth-skirted waving woods on the other side.”

prised that part of the present county of Louth, extending from the Cnailgne (Cooley) mountains to the river Boyne. Dundalk, Louth, Drumisklin, now Drumiskin, Fanghard, and Monasterboice are mentioned as in this territory. See Annals of Tighernach ad ann. 1002.—Ussher's Primordia, pp. 627, 705, 827, 902. This territory was also called Machaire Oirghiall, as being the level portion of the extensive country of Oirghiall, and the ancient inhabitants were called Conaille Muirtheimhne.

¹ Eamhain Maichi, more usually written Eamhain Macha. This was the name of the ancient palace of the kings of Ulster, from the period of Ciombaeth, its founder, who flourished, according to the accurate annalist, Tighernach, about three hundred years before Christ, till A. D. 332, when it was destroyed by the three Collas, the ancestors of the people called Oirghialla (Oriels). From this period it remained without a house till the year 1387, when Niall O'Neill, presumptive king of Ulster, erected a house within it for the entertainment of the literati of Ireland. Colgan, who does not appear to have ever seen this place, describes the state of the ruins of the Ultonian palace as follows, in 1647: "Emania prope Ardmacliam, nunc fossis latis vestigiis murorum eminentibus, et ruderibus, pristinum redolens splendorem."—Trias Thaum. p. 6. See also O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 36.

Dr. Lanigan, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. i. p. 314, note 135, writes: "The growth of Armagh contributed to its downfall." But this observation is quite untenable, as Emania had been deserted for a whole century before Armagh was founded. The ruins of Eamhain, or, as it is now corruptly called, the Navan fort, are to be seen about two miles to the west of Armagh, to the right of the road as you go from Armagh to Kinard or Caledon. They are well described by Dr. Stuart in his Historical Memoirs of Armagh, pp. 578, 579.

The commencement of his hosting, also,
 Always at Eamhain Macha^t;
 The confinement of his hostages—of old 'twas heard,
 At Dun Sobhairce^u the bright;

A rich gift on taking his place
 At Uisneach^v of Meath of the mead,
 In every seventh goodly year,
 To be given by him to the rightful king of Uisneach.

There are noble prohibitions
 To the bold king of Uladh:
 The horse-race of Rath Line^w, also,
 Among the youths of Araidhe^x;

To listen to the fluttering of the flocks of birds
 Of Linn Saileach^y after set of sun;

The editor examined the site of Eamhain with great care in 1835, but could not find any trace of stone walls (vestigii murorum eminentibus) there; the earthen works, however, are very extensive, and show that it must have been a place of considerable importance.

^u Dun Sobhairce, Sobhairce's fort (Dun-severick), an insulated rock containing some fragments of the ruins of a castle, near the centre of a small bay, three miles east of the Giant's Causeway, in the county of Antrim. See Colgan, Trius Thaum., p. 182, where its situation is described as follows: "Dunsobhairce est arx maritima et longè vetusta regionis Dal Riedie, que nomen illud a Sobarchio filio Ebrici, Rege Hibernie, primoque arcis illius conditore circa annum mundi 3668, desumpsit, ut ex Quatuor Magistris in annalibus, Catalogo Regum Hibernie Ketanno, Lib. i., et aliis passim rerum Hibernicarum Scriptoribus colligitur." Charles O'Connor of Belanagare, and all the writers on Irish topography, down to the year 1833, had assumed that Dun Sobhairce was the old name of Carrickfergus, but the editor proved, in an article in the Dublin Penny Journal, p. 361-363, May 11th, 1833, that it is the place now called Dunseverick.

^v Uisneach.—See note z, p. 6, supra.

^w Rath Line.—This rath, which was otherwise called Rath mor Maighe Line, is still in existence in the plain of Magh Line (Moylinny), Lower Massareene, Antrim. See it referred to in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 680, and in the Annals of Connaught, at 1315.

^x Araidhe, i. e. of Dal Araidhe, a large region in the east of Ulster, extending from Newry, in the south of the county of Down, to Sliabh Mis (Slemmish), in the barony of Lower Antrim, in the county of Antrim. Magh Line, above described, is a portion of Dal Araidhe. It extended from Lough Neagh to near Carrickfergus.

² Daire-mic-Daire, i. e. roboretum filii Darii. This name would be anglicized Derrymacderry or Derryviadary, but the editor is not acquainted with any place of the name.

^a Uisce Bo Neimhidh, i. e. the water of the cow of Neimhidh. This name would be anglicized Uskabonevy, but there is no stream, well, or locality in Ulster at present bearing the name, and the editor has

To celebrate the feast of the flesh of the bull
Of Daire-mic-Daire^z, the brown and rough;

To go in the month of March to Magh Cobha
To the king of Uladh is not lucky;
To drink of the water, whence strife ensues,
Of Bo Neimhidh^a between two darknesses.

Here are, let them be proclaimed boldly,
To the five kings of Eire,
With the king of Teamhair, through all time,
Their prerogatives and prohibitions.

never met any authority to show where in Ulster it was situated.

^b O man, α $\dot{\rho}\dot{\iota}\mu$.—A part of the first line is usually repeated at the end of every separate poem. One reason evidently is to prevent mistake, as the vellum MSS. are so closely written that it would not be always easy to distinguish the end of one poem from the beginning of another, without some notice of this kind. It also serves as an indication that the particular piece is concluded.

^a Cis ail, i. e. tribute rent. This derivation is also given in Cormac's Glossary.
The term Caiscal, which is the name of many places in Ireland, as well as of the ancient metropolis of Munster, denotes a circular stone fort; and there can be little doubt that Core, king of Munster, erected a fort of this description on the rock, when he changed its name from Sidh-dhruim to Caiscal.

^b Sidh-dhruim, i. e. fairy hill.

^c Corc, the son of Lughaidh.—The date of his death is not given in the authentic Irish annals, but we may form a pretty correct idea of his period from the fact that his grandson, Aengus mac Nadfræech, was slain in the year 489.

^d Ele.—At this period the territory of Ele comprised, besides the country afterwards called Ely O'Carroll in the King's County, the present baronies of Eliogarty and Ikerrin, in the county of Tipperary.

THE BOOK OF RIGHTS.

I.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF CAISEAL.

The Book of Rights which treats of the tributes and stipends of Eire (Ireland) as Bencan, son of Sesenean, the psalmist of Patrick, ordained, as the Book of Gleann-Da-Loch relates.

Here follows concerning the laws of the right of Caiseal (Cashel), and of the tributes and rents given to it and by it, and of the stipends given to the kings of Munha (Munster), and the other kings of Eire, by the king of Caiseal, when it is the seat of the monarchy.

Caiseal [is derived] from cais-il, i. e. a stone on which they used to lay down pledges, or cis-aíl^a, i. e. payment of tribute, from the tribute given to it by the men of Eire. Sidh-dhruim^b was the name of the place at first.

It happened in the time of Core^c, the son of Lughaidh, that two swine-herds frequented that hill for the space of a quarter of a year to feed their swine on acorns, for it was a woody hill. The names of those swine-herds were Durdru, the swine-herd of the king of Ele^d, and Cularan, the swine-herd of the king of Muscraidhe^e; and there

^a Muscraidhe (Thire).—This was the ancient name of the district now comprised in the baronies of Upper and Lower Ormond, in the north of the county of Tipperary. The church Cill Cheire (Kilkeary, near the town of Nenagh), and Leatreacha, (Latteragh, about eight miles south of the same town), are mentioned as in this territory. See Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp.

151, 461, and the Feilire Aenguis, Jan. 5, and Oct. 27. It is stated in a letter written by Sir Charles O'Carroll to the Lord Deputy, in 1585 (and now preserved in the Lambeth Library, Carew Collection, No. 608, fol. 15), that the name Lower Ormond was then lately imposed upon "Muskry-beery," by the usurpation of the then Earl of Ormond.

⁴ There appeared to them a figure, &c.
 —This story is also given by Keating in his History of Ireland.

⁵ The angel Victor.—According to the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, published by Colgan, lib. i. c. 19, and Jocelin, c. 19,

Victor was the name of St. Patrick's guardian angel. But Dr. Lanigan asserts that "there is no foundation for what we read in some of his Lives concerning his being often favoured with the converse of an angel Victor," &c. Eccles. Hist., vol. i. p. 144.

appeared unto them a figure^f, brighter than the sun, with a voice sweeter than the angular harp, blessing the hill and the place, [and] predicting [the arrival of St.] Patrick, and it said:

Good, good, good the man who shall rule Caiseal,
 Walking righteously in the name of the Great Father,
 And of the Son of the Virgin,
 With the grace of the Holy Spirit;
 A comely, great, good Bishop,
 Child of life unto judgment,
 He shall fill noble angelic Eire
 With people of each order of various grades,
 To serve Christ the benign.

The figure which appeared there was Victor^g, the angel of Patrick, prophesying [the coming of] Patrick, and that the grandeur and supremacy of Eire would be perpetually in that place.

Accordingly that town is a metropolis to Patrick, and a chief city of the king of Eire. And the tribute and service of the men of Eire are always due to the king of that place, i. e. the king of Caiseal, through the blessing of Patrick^h, the son of Alplainn.

Now here are the stipends of the kings from the king of Caiseal, if he be king [monarch] of Eire, and his visitation and refection among them on that account, i. e.

One hundred drinking-horns, one hundred swords, one hundred steeds, and one hundred tunics [are given] from him to the king of Cruachan; and refection from the king of Cruachan to him for two quarters of a year, and to accompany him into Tir-Chonail.

Twenty rings, twenty chess-boards, and twenty steeds to the king of Cineal Conaill, and a month's refection from the Cineal Conaill to him, and to escort him into Tir-Eoghain.

Fifty drinking-horns, fifty swords, and fifty steeds to the king of Aileach, and a month's refection from him to him, and to escort him to Tulach Og.

Thirty drinking-horns, thirty swords, and thirty steeds to the lord

O'Riagain.

^j Laighin Tuath-gabhair.—All that

^k Along with the Taidhean.—Taidhean, or tuighean, was the name of the ornamented mantle worn by the chief poet or laureate of all Ireland. It is described in Cormac's Glossary.

^l A hundred drinking-horns, or goblets.
—O'Brien derives the word cornn from cornn, a horn, Latin cornu, and asserts that drinking cups were anciently of horn.

^m A hundred swords.—The word claidéan, or cloidean, is evidently cognate with the Latin gladius. It is remarkable that Giraldus Cambrensis (Topographia Hibernia Distinct, iii. c. x.) makes no mention of the sword among the military weapons used by the Irish in his time.

Tulach Og, [who gives him] refection for twelve days and escorts him to the Oirghialla.

Eight coats of mail, sixty tunics, and sixty steeds to the king of the Oirghialla, [by whom] he is entertained for a month at Eamhain and escorted to the Ulstermen.

A hundred drinking-horns, a hundred matala, a hundred swords, a hundred steeds, and a hundred ships to the king of Uladh, and the Ulstermen give him a month's refection and escort him to Teamhair (Tara).

Thirty coats of mail, thirty rings, a hundred steeds, and thirty chess-boards to the king of Teamhair; and he receives a month's refection at Teamhair, and the four tribes of Teamhair¹ escort him to Ath Cliath (Dublin).

Ten women, ten steeds, ten ships to the king of Ath Cliath, and a month's refection [is allowed] to him from the king of Ath Cliath, who accompanies him to the Leinstermen.

Thirty ships, thirty steeds, thirty cunhals (bondmaids), and thirty cows to the king of Laighin, and two months' refection from the Leinstermen to him, i. e. a month's from northern Laighin¹ and a month's from southern Laighin; [to whom he presents] thirty steeds, thirty coats of mail, and forty swords.

Such are his stipends and escorts, of which the gifted author Benean the son of Sesnean said:

THE RIGHT of each king from the king of Caiseal,
 Shall be question to bards for ever:
 It shall be found along with the Tacidhean^k
 With the chief poet of the Gaoidhil constantly.

 A hundred steeds, a hundred tunicsⁿ besides,

The mention of the swords in this work, as among the weapons presented by the kings to their chieftains, shows the inaccuracy of Cambrensis. Spenser considers that the Irish always had "their broad swordes," and he adduces them as an evidence of his favourite theory, the descent of the Irish from the Scythians.

ⁿ Tunics, map. This word is translated "cloaks" by Mac Curtin, in his Brief Discourse in Vindication of the Antiquity of Ireland, p. 173; but in a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, II. 2, 13, it is used to translate the Latin tunica.

² The province of Brannubh, i. e. the province of Leinster, from Brann Dubh, one of its celebrated kings. It is here put for the king of Cashel's territory by a poetical license. See page 40, note r.

^a Green tumulus, ορυμκλαδ υαινε. This alludes to the hill on which the chief of Tulach Og used to inaugurate the Irish monarchs of the northern Ui Neill race. See Addenda to the Ui Fiachrach, note L, on the Inauguration of the Irish chiefs, pp. 425, 431, &c.

^b Tulach Og, i. e. the hill of the youths (Tullaghoge, corruptly pronounced Tullyhawk), a small village in the parish of Desertereaght, barony of Dungannon, Tyrone. After the establishment of surnames in the tenth century, the chief family of this place took the surname of O'h-Again (O'Hagan). See last reference.

^c Eamhain.—This was the ancient palace of the kings of Ulster; but after the year 332 it lay in a state of desertion, though occasionally referred to as the head residence of the Oirghialla, as in the present instance.

^d Coats of mail, λύιρεαχα.—The Irish word λύιρεαχ, (which is cognate with, if not derived from the Latin lorica), certainly signifies mail armour.

^e Ulstermen.—Uladh was originally the name of the entire province of Ulster, but after the year 332 it was applied to that portion of the east of Ulster (Down and Antrim) bounded on the west by the Lower Bann and Lough Neagh, and by Gleann Ríge, through which an artificial boundary was formed, now called the Danes' Cast. This boundary is distinctly referred to in a manuscript in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. iii. 18, p. 783, in the following words: Ἐο'η τιοῖβ ἀβυρ ὁ ὄθιοσ Ρίγε ὁ ριγνεσ τὸ ρανν ὄθιοσ Ρίγε ὁ'η λυβάρ ἀνωρ εατορρα ἡ Clannaib Ruðraige ἡ nír pilleatop clanna Ruðraige anun ó pua le, i. e. on the hither side of Gleann Ríge, the boundary of Gleann Ríge was formed from the Newry upwards between them [i. e. the Clann-Colla] and the Clanna Rudhraighe, and the Clanna Rudhraighe never returned across it from that time to the present. On an old map of Ulster the river of Newry is called Owen Glanree fluvius.

O'Flaherty and others, who have written on the history of Ireland in the Latin language, have for the sake of distinction adopted Ululia to denote the circumscribed territory to the east, and Ultonia to denote the entire province of Ulster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part III. c. 78, p. 372; Ussher's Primordia, pp. 816, 1018; O'Conor's Dissert. p. 176, and Lan. Eccl. Hist. vol. ii. p. 28.

"Caputis modicis assueti sunt & aretis, trans humeros deorsum, cubito tenus protensis: variisque colorum generibus panniculorumque plerunque consutis: sub quibus phalings laneis quoque palliorum vice utuntur, seu braceis caligatis, seu calligis braccatis, & his plerunque colore fucatis."

Dr Lynch says that the falaing was the outside rug cloak. See Cambrensis Eversus, p. 104; but Ledwich asserts (Antiquities, second edit. p. 267) that "this it could not be, for Cambrensis describes it as worn under the hooded mantle." He also asserts that the name falaing is not Irish, but that it is derived from the Saxon Falding, and that it came with the manufacture into this island; but this is all gratuitous assertion.

⁸ Boirche.—A territory, now the barony of Mourne, the mountains of which were called Beanna Boirche. This clearly appears from a notice of Boirche in the Dinnsenchus, and also in the Annals of Tighearn

There is a moat near the source of the Upper Bann, still called móza bean-na Ḫoirche.

^h Ten ships.—The word long is in common use to denote a ship. We have yet no evidence to prove the size or construction of the vessels here referred to. It is curious to remark, that the monarch bestows ships upon those princes only whose territories extended along the sea.

ⁱ Tulach Chearnaigh, i. e. Cearnach's hill, Tullycarney, in the county of Down.

^j Tara.—Ṫεαμḫαρ, the ancient palace of the monarchs of Ireland till it was cursed by St. Ruadhan of Lothra, in the reign of Diarmaid, the son of Fearghus Ceirbheoil, who died in the year 565, after which it became a ruin, but the Irish monarchs, and sometimes the kings of Meath, were called from it kings of Teamhair.—See Petrie's History and Antiquities of Tara Hill, pp. 100–104. See p. 7, note ^b, supra.

^k Duibhliinn.—See p. 12, note ^g, supra.

or chief lord of Ossory."

"It was not grooms that lashed them, nocho n-eachlachta po ploideao, i. e. it was not grooms but chieftains who rode them. The meaning of pluideao, which is explained ḡeaprao, cutting, by O'Clérigh, must be here determined from the kind of whip, goad, or spur, with which the ancient Irish incited their horses. The writer of Cath Cluana Tarbh states, that the king of Leinster drove his horse with a rod of yew, immediately before the battle of Clontarf (A. D. 1014); and Giraldus Cambrensis, who wrote about the year 1185, asserts, that the Irish did not use spurs, but incited their horses with rods crooked at the head. His words are:

"Item sellis equitando non utuntur, non ocreis, non calcariibus: virga tantum, quam manu gestant, in superiori parte camerata, tam equos excitant, quam ad cursus invitant. Frenis quidem utuntur, tam chani quam freni vice fungentibus; quibus & equi, semper herbis assueti ad pabula nequaquam impediuntur. Præterea nudi & inermes ad bella procedunt. Habent enim arma pro onere. Inermes vero dimicare pro audacia reputant." Top. Hib. Dist. iii. c. 10.

^v Muscraide.—According to all the Irish genealogical works, these were the descendants of Cairbre Musc, the son of Conaire Mor, monarch of Ireland in the beginning of the third century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 63. According to O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem there were six Muscraides, all in Munster, namely, 1, Muscraide Mitine, the country of O'Floinn; 2, Muscraide Luachra, the country of O'h-Aodha, along the Abhainn Mhor (Blackwater); 3, Muscraide Tri Maighe, the country of O'Donnagain; 4, Muscraide Treitheirne, the country of O'Cuirc; 5, Muscraide Iarthair Feimbin, the country of O'Carthaigh; 6, Muscraide Thire, the country of O'Donghaile and O'Fuirc. O'Brien, in his Irish Dictionary, after enumerating the several Muscraides, has the following remark: "It is referred to the judicious reader if it be a likely story that one Cairbre Musc, supposed son of a king of Meath in the beginning of the third century, and of whose progeny no account has ever been given, should have given the name of Muscry to every one of these territories, so widely distant from each other in the province of Munster."

THE RIGHT of Caiseal and of the king of Caiseal from [his] territories generally, down here.

With the Muscraidhe, in the first place, this tribute begins, i. e. ten hundred cows, and ten hundred hogs from the Muscraidhe.

A hundred cows, and a hundred pigs, and a hundred oxen from the men of Uaithne.

Two hundred wethers, and a hundred hogs, and a hundred cows, and a hundred green mantles from the men of Ara.

A hundred cows, and a hundred oxen, and a hundred hogs from Corca Luighe.

Ten hundred oxen and ten hundred cows from Corca Dhuibhne, also.

Ten hundred cows and ten hundred hogs from Ciarraidhe Luachra.

Ten hundred cows and ten hundred oxen from Corca Bhaiscinn.

A thousand cows, and a thousand oxen, and a thousand rams, and a thousand cloaks from Boirinn.

A hundred cows, and a hundred oxen, and a hundred sows from Seachtmhodh.

Two thousand hogs and a thousand cows from the Deise.

It is not for inferiority [of race] that they pay these tributes, but for their territories, and for the superiority of the right of Caiseal, and for its having been blessed by Patrick, as Bencan sang:

THE RIGHT of Caiseal, without grief to its heroes,

It is my duty to record;

It is pleasing to the king of Gabhran the fierce

To find it [acknowledged] by his poet.

From the Muscraidhe without knotty falsehood,

Π

On these words it is necessary to remark, that there is as much authority from Irish history for the existance of Cairbre Musc, as there is for any other fact belonging to the same period; and that if we reject the account handed down of him and his father, who was full monarch of Ireland (not king of Meath, as O'Brien makes him, without any authority), and of O'Flóinn and others, his descendants, we should with equal reason reject every other fact belonging to this period stated by those genealogists. See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 340. For the account handed down by the Irish genealogists of Cairbre Musc, giving name to those territories, O'Brien substitutes an ety-μηλι τορε ό τηυαταιβ̄.

mological conjecture of his own, namely, that, it is likely that Muscraide is derived from mus, pleasant, and crioch, a country; but this is beneath criticism, as it is an undoubted fact that the termination (which is a patronymic one, somewhat like ιων in Greek) is raidhe, not craighe, as we learn from tribe-names similarly formed, as Cal-raidhe, Caen-raidhe, Ciar-raidhe, Greag-raidhe, Os-raidhe, Trad-raidhe. This being the case, we see that the root is musc, and that O'Brien's etymology is visionary. Dr. Lanigan, who, because he corrected proofs for Vallancey, was imbued with the rage for etymological delirium which was commenced by the British etymologists, and was taken up by O'Brien, and brought to its acme by Vallancey, approves of this silly etymological guess of O'Brien's, as highly probably, and writes as follows: "There were several tracts in Munster named Muscraighe, so called, says Colgan, (Tr Th. p. 186) from a prince Musc, son of King Conor [recte Conaire] the great. O'Brien, with much greater appearance of truth, derives that name from mus, pleasant, and crioch, country." The delusion will, it is hoped, stop here, and will never be supported by a third authority worth naming.

1. The extent of Muscraide Mitaine, or, as it was called after the establishment of surnames, Muscraide Ui Fhloinn, is now preserved in the deanery of "Musgrylin," which comprises, according to the Liber Regalis Visitationis, fifteen parishes in the north-west of the county of Cork.

2. Muscraide Luachra was the ancient name of the district in which the Abhainn Mhor (Blackwater) has its source; it was so called from its contiguity to the mountains of Sliabh Luachra (in Kerry). — O'Brien says that Muiserith Luachra was the old name of the tract of land which lies between Kilmallock, Kilfinan, and Ardpatrick, in the county of Limerick; but for this he quotes no authority, and it is against every authority, for we know from Ó'h Uidhrin that the tribe of Muscraide Luachra were seated about the Abhainn Mhor (ημ αβαιηη ημοιρ μαζηριξ̄), but the position given them by O'Brien would leave them many miles from that river, as well as from Sliabh Luachra, from which they derived their distinguishing appellative. 3. Muscraide Tri Maighe, i. e. Muscraide of the three plains, which belonged to O'Donnagain, was not the barony of Orrery, as O'Brien asserts, for Orrery is the anglicized form of Orbraidhe, of which presently, and we have proof positive that "Muskerry-Donagan,"

A thousand cows,—it is the seat of their relative",
A thousand hogs from their territories.

A hundred cows on the hill at time of calving,
A hundred pigs within to be stored,
A hundred oxen to the resident host are ordered
From the men of Uaithne^x freely.

Two hundred wethers from the host I will say,
A hundred hogs, the tribute they exact, which was granted by King John (see Charter 9^o. ann. Reg.) to William de Barry, is included in the present barony of Barrymore. Thus O'Brien's wild conjectures, which he put as if they were absolute demonstrated truths, vanish before the light of records and etymology. 4 and 5. The territories of Muscraidhe Breoghain, or Muscraidhe Ui Chuire, and Muscraidhe of the west of Feimhin, are now included in the barony of Clanwilliam, in the south-west of the county of Tipperary, as appears from Keating, who places in Muscraidhe Chuire Cill Beacain (Kilpeacon) in the barony of Clanwilliam; from the Book of Lismore, fol. 47, b, b; the Tripartite Life of Saint Patrick, lib. iii. cap. 32, which places in Muscraidhe Breoghain the church of Cill Fiacla (Kilfeakle), in the barony of Clanwilliam, about four miles and a half to the north-east of the town of Tipperary; and this is more particularly evident from the Ormond records, in which this territory is particularly defined. See grant of Edward III. to the Earl of Ormond. 6. Muscraidhe Thire includes the present baronies of Upper and Lower Ormond, in the county of Tipperary, as we can infer from the places mentioned as in it, such as Cill Ceri (Kilkeare parish in Upper Ormond), and Leitreacha Odhrain (Latteragh, in the barony of Upper Ormond), about eight miles to the south of Nenagh. See Felire Aenguis, at 27th October and 5th January, and Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp. 151, 461. The extent of this territory is defined by Sir Charles O'Carroll, in a letter to the Lord Deputy in 1595, in which he calls it "Museryhyry," and states that the earl lately called it by the false name of Lower Ormond, a name which it had never borne before, inasmuch as it was always considered a part of "Thomond."

^w Relative.—The Muscraidhe descend from Saraidh, the daughter of Conn of the Hundred Battles; and the kings of Cashel of both houses, of Eoghanacht and Dal Cais, from Sadhbh her sister, who was married to Oilioll Olum, king of Munster.

^x Uaithne, i. e. Uaithne Cliach and Uaithne Tire. The former now the barony of "Owneybeg," in the county of Limerick, and the latter the barony of "Owney," adjoining it, in the county of Tipperary. After the establishment of surnames the families of Mac Ceoach (Mac Keoghs), and O'Loingsigh were dominant in Uaithne Tire, and those of O'h-Ithnain (Helfernans), and O'Cathalain (Cahallans), in Uaithne Cliach, afterwards dispossessed by the Leinster family of O'Maolriain (O'Mulrians), of the race of Cathaoir Mor.

^z From the men of Ara, i. e. Ara-Tire, now the barony of “Ara,” or “Duhara,” in the north-west of the county of Tipperary, and Ara Cliach, a territory in the west of the county of Limerick. According to the Irish genealogists, the people of Ara are of the Rudriciau race, and descended from Feartlachta, the son of Fearghus, king of the province of Ulster, in the first century.—See O’Fla. Ogygia, part iii. cap. 46. Ara-Tire is the present barony of “Ara,” in the north-west of the county of Tipperary; but the name of the territory of Ara Cliach is not preserved in that of any barony, but we know from the oldest Lives of St. Patrick, and various other authorities, that it adjoined the territory of Ui Fidhginte on the east side, and that it comprised the parish of Kiltcealy and all the barony of Ui Cuanach, “Coonagh,” in the east of the county of Limerick, and the hill of Cnoc Aine, anglicè Knockany, in the barony of “Small County,” in the same county. It appears from a tract in Leabhar na h-Uidhri, fol. 83, that the territory of Ara was divided from that of Ui Fidhginte by the River Samhair, which appears from various reasons to be the “Morning Star.” In the course of time the people, originally called by the name Ara, were driven out or suppressed by the dominant race of Oilioll Olum, and a tribe of the race of Eoghan, son of this Oilioll, gave it the name of Eoghanacht Aine Cliach, of whom, after the establishment of surnames, O’Ciarmaic (now barbarized to “Kirby”), was the chief.—See O’h-Uidhrin’s topographical poem, and O’Flaherty’s Ogygia, part iii. cap. 67.

^a Corca Luighe, i. e. the race of Lughaidh, one of the tribe-names of the family of O’Eidirsceoil (O’Driscolls), and their correlatives, who were otherwise called Darbhine. It appears from a curious tract on the tribes, districts, and history of this territory, preserved in the Book of Leacan, fol. 122, that before the families of O’Donnoblain, O’Maghthamlua, O’Suilleabhain, and others, were driven into this territory after the English invasion, it comprised the entire of the diocese of “Ross.” This too, we may presume, was its extent when this poem was written. In latter ages, however, "O'Driscoll's country" of Corca Luighe was narrowed to a very inconsiderable territory, in consequence of the encroachments of "O'Mahony, O'Donovan, and O'Sullivan Beare;" and in the year 1615 it was defined as containing only the following parishes in the barony of Carbery, viz. "Myross, Glanbarahane, (Castlehaven) Tullagh, Creagh, Kilcoe, Aghadown, and Cleare Island." The tract in the Book of Leacan is well worth publishing, as throwing much light on the ancient topography of the south of Ireland.

^c Distrained, ní ic ceacá.—It is not necessary to levy by force—or, I remember not when levied by force.

^e Dairbhre O'Duibhne.—This, which is the name of the island of "Valencia," in the west of Kerry, is here put for Corca Dhuibhne, a large territory in Kerry, belonging to the families of O'Fáilbhe (O'Falvys), O'Seagha (O'Sheas), and O'Conghaile (O'Connells). Shortly anterior to the English invasion, O'Falvy possessed the barony of "Coreaguiny," O'Shea that of "Iveragh," and O'Connell that of "Magunihy;" but about the middle of the eleventh century the Uí Donchadhá (O'Donoghoes) settled in Magunihy, and drove the O'Connells westwards into Iveragh, where they were seated at Ballycarbery, near Cahersiveen. After the English invasion, about A. D. 1192, the families of O'Suilleabhain (O'Sullivans), and Mac Carthaigh (Mac Carthys), who had been previously seated in the great plain of Munster, as will be presently shown, were driven by the English into Kerry, and then those baronies were seized upon by the Mac Carthys and O'Sullivans, who reduced the families of the race of Conaire Mor to obscurity, inasmuch that the old "Annals of Innisfallen," the chronicle of the district, does not even once mention any of them except O'Falvy, who, being chief of all this race, retained a considerable territory till finally overwhelmed by the increasing power of the Mac Carthys and O'Sullivans, as well as of the Fitzgeralds, Ferriters, Husseys, Trants, and other Anglo-Irish families, who settled at an early period in his territory of Corca Dhuibhne, and were supported against him by the Earls of Desmond, who resided principally at Tralee.

^f Ciarraidhe, i. e. the race of Ciar, son of Fearghus, king of Ulster, by Meadlibh, queen of Connacht in the first century. The principal family of this race took the surname of O'Conchobhair (OConor). His country, which is often called Ciarraidhe Luachra, from the mountains of Sliabh Luachra, extended from the harbour of Tralee to the mouth of the Shannon, and from Sliabh Luachra to Tarbert. From this territory the county of Kerry has received its name. The Ciarraidhe were also called the race of Feorna Floinn. See note further on.

^g Baiseinn. — This was the name of a very celebrated tribe, giving their name to a territory in the south-west of the county of Clare, of which Leim Chonchulainn (Loophead) forms the western extremity. They were the descendants of Cairbre Baschaoín, or Cairbre of the Smooth Palm, the brother of Cairbre Músc, already mentioned. This territory originally comprised the baronies of "Clonderlaw," "Moyarta," and "Ibrickan," in the county of Clare; but, after the expulsion of the Mac Gormans from Leinster, shortly after the English invasion, they were settled by O'Brien in the north of Corca Bhaiseinn, adjoining Corcomroe. After the establishment of surnames, in the eleventh century, the chiefs of this territory took the surname of O'Domhnaill (O'Donnell), and O'Baiscinn; but, on the increasing of the population and power of the Dal Chais, the family of Mac Mathghabhna (Mac Mahon) became chiefs of this territory (which in latter ages comprised only the baronies of Clonderalaw and Moyarta), and reduced the race of the monarch Conaire Mór to comparative insignificance.

^h Boirinn, i. e., a rocky district, Burren, a barony in the north of the county of Clare. The chief of this territory is of the same race as "O'Conor Kerry," and, after the establishment of surnames, took that of O'Lochlainn (anglice, O'Loughlin or O'Loughlen). It is strange that Corcomruadh is omitted here, though given in the next poem.

ⁱ Seachtmhadh.—This territory is not mentioned by O'h-Uidhrin. Dr. O'Brien, in his Dissertations on the Laws of the ancient Irish, Vall. Collect. vol. i. p. 383, thinks that it was the barony of Iveragh, in the county of Kerry; but this could not be so, as that barony is mentioned under the name of Dairbhre. It was in the county of Tipperary, adjoining Ara.

scended from Fiacha Luighde, the elder brother of Conn of the Hundred Battles, monarch of Ireland, and were originally seated in the present barony of "Deece," Deire Teampác, to the south of Tara, in Meath, but they were expelled from Meath by the monarch Cormac mac Airt, when they settled in Munster, and subdued that part of the country extending from the River Suir to the sea, and from Lismore to Credanhead, the eastern extremity of the present county of Waterford. In the fifth century, Aenghus, king of Munster, granted them the plain of Magh Feimhin, lying between Cashel and Clonmel, in the present county of Tipperary. See Keating, in the reign of Cormac mac Airt, and O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 69. After the establishment of surnames the chief families of this race took the surnames of O'Bruic (Brick), and O'Faelain (Phelan). They were dispossessed by the Powers and Butlers shortly after the English invasion.

¹ Cianachta.—This tribe were descended from Cian, son of Oilíoll Olum. They gave name to the present barony of Keenaght, in the county of Derry. After the establishment of surnames, the head of this family took the surname of O'Conelohhair (O'Conor) of Gleann Gemhin, which was the name of that part of the vale of the River Roa (Roe), near the village of Dun Gemhin (Dungiven). This family was dispossessed by the family of O'Cathain (O'Kanes), before the English invasion, and they are now all reduced to farmers or cottiers.

^m Comharba.—This word is here used to denote heir or successor to property,

A tribute this for their territory, originally,
 Noble is he who ordained it,
 Not [on account] of ignobility in the vigorous hosts of the Deise,
 But of the nobleness of the plain of Caiseal.

That is the tribute of Mumha, perpetual,
 Until the end of time shall come,
 Patrick, of this city over cities,
 In the time of Corc adjusted it. THE RIGHT.

THESE ARE further the inculcations of Benean, son of Sescnean, the psalmist of Patrick. He was of the Cianachta¹ of Gleann Gemhin, of the race of Tadhg, son of Cian of great Mumha (Munster), i. e. that the comharba^m of Caiseal is a general head of all, inasmuch as he is the comharba of Patrick; and when the king of Caiseal is not king of Eire, the government of the half of Eire is due to him, i. e. from Tigh Duinnⁿ, in the west of Eire, to Ath Cliath (Dublin) of Leinster. The hereditary receivers of stipends and the attendants of the king of Caiseal are the race of Breasal Breac^o, i. e. the Osraidhe. The Leinstermen are bound to come to attend the king of Caiseal any day in battle, against Conn^p or aliens.

ⁿ Tigh Duinn, i. e. the house of Donn. This name is applied to three islands at the mouth of the bay of Ceann Mara (Kenne-mare), now called the Cow, Bull, and Calf. Donn, the son of Mileadh (Milesius), is said to have been lost here when the Milesian colony from Spain attempted to land on the coast of Kerry, and hence, his spirit having been believed to haunt the place where he was lost, the place received the name of Tigh Duinn. See Keating's History of Ireland (Haliday's edition), p. 292, and O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 16.

of this Breasal Breac, are descended the Osraidhe (i. e. the men of Ossory). See p. 17, note ^a, supra.

^r Border tribute, i. e. for preserving their border from hostile encroachment.

^s The battle of Druim Deargaidh.—According to the Annals of the Four Masters, this battle was fought in the year 507, between Fiacha, the son of Niall of the Nine Hostages, ancestor of the family of Mac Eochagain (Mageoghegans), and the Leinstermen, when the latter were defeated.

^t Clann Neill, i. e. the descendants of Niall of the Nine Hostages. After the establishment of surnames, the principal families of the southern Ui Neill (Nepotes Nelli, as they are called by Adarnan, Vita Columbae, lib. i. c. 49), were the following, viz. O'Maolsheachluin (O'Melaghlín), Mac Catharnaigh, in later ages called Sionnach (i. e. Fox), Mac Eochagain (Mageoghegan), O'Maolnuaidh (O'Molloy), O'Coindhealbain (O'Quinlan), O'Ceallaigh (O'Kelly) of Breagh or Bregia, and several others, who sunk into insignificance soon after the English invasion.

^u The fasting of Ruadhan of Lothair, i. e. (by his name in Latin) St. Rodanus, the patron saint of Lortha (Lorha), now a small village in the barony of Lower Ormond, Tipperary, and six miles to the north of Burrisokane (recté Burghis Ua are bound to attend with him into battle, for maintaining them in their territory; and he is entitled to a border tribute^r from the men of Connacht. The cause that he obtained this was, that many saints had fasted at Teamhair, which was the royal hill of the Leinstermen till the battle of Druim Deargaidh^s, when it passed away from them, and their part of the plain of Midhe has been the lawful property of the Clann Neill^t ever since.

The cause of the extinction of the regality of Teamhair was the fasting of Patrick and his people against Laeghaire, the son of Niall, and the fasting of Ruadban of Lothair^u, the son of Aengus, with the saints of Eire, against Diarmaid, son of Cearbhall, and against the Four Tribes of Teamhair^v; and these saints promised [i. e. predicted] that there should not be a house at Teamhair of the race of Laeghaire, or of the seed of Niall, [but] that there should be of the race of Oilioll Olum^w.

There are three kings in Leath Mhogha, who do not render tribute to the king of Caiseal, i. e. the king of Osraidhe, the king of Raithleann, and the king of Loch Lein; concerning which Benean, the son of Sescnean, the psalmist, said :

BENEAN—a blessing on the man,

[Is he] who put this in the psalter of Caiseal,
The history of every king and his income,
The best that walk the land of Mumba.

The king of Caiseal, as head over all,

Is what is here [ordained] until the [day of] judgment,

Cathain). For the whole story relating to the cursing of Tara, in 563, by this saint, see Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, page 101.

^v The Four Tribes of Tara.—After the establishment of surnames these were the families of Oh-Airt (O'Harts), O'Riagain (O'Regans), O'Ceallaigh (O'Kellys) of Breagh, and O'Conghalaigh (O'Connollys). See Battle of Magh Rath, pp. 9, 10, and supra, p. 32, note 1.

^w Of the race of Oilioll Olum.—There is no authority for this promise or prediction of the saints in any of the Lives of Saint Patrick, or even in that of Rodanus, who was himself of the race of Oilioll Olum. According to the genealogies of the saints, collected by the O'Clérighs, St. Ruadban Lothra was the son of Fearghus Birn (not Aengus, as above in the text), who was son of Eochaidh, son of Deardubh, son of Daire Cearba, the ancestor of the family of O'Donnabhain (O'Donovans), and the fourth in descent from Oilioll Olum.

^b Umhall, a territory in the county of Mayo, comprising the baronies of "Burishoole" and "Murrenk." These two territories are usually called "The Owles," by English writers, from their pronunciation of Umhall, viz., Oo-al. After the establishment of surnames, the chief family of Umhall took the surname of O'Maille, not from the territory, as is supposed by some modern writers, but from an ancestor Maille. See further as to Umhal and the clann Mhaille, in the Uí Fhiachrach, p. 43, note ^t, and p. 181, notes ⁱ, ^j.

^c The blessing of Patrick.—The writer says, that after the cursing of Teambhair, the blessing of St. Patrick was transferred to Caiseal, which had never been cursed. He next insinuates that the race of Conn would not be worthy to re-erect Teambhair, and consequently that the race of Olioll Olum, who would one day restore the royal seat, would become the dominant family of Ireland; but this has not been granted, as the southern annalists do not even pretend to have had any monarch

^a At Teamhair of Fal, ἡ ἑ-Θεαίτη ἡ ἑ-Θεαίτη; so called from its having the Lia Fail, which was preserved there. This has been translated "Stone of Fate," or "Destiny," on what authority deserves inquiry. The same word here rhymes or corresponds with itself in the same sense in this and the succeeding line. See p. 39, n. i.

^c Inis Fail.—This was one of the ancient names of Ireland, and it is said to have been derived from the Lia Fail. See Keating (Haliday's edition), p. 116; also Petrie's Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 135.

^f Till they are erected by the race of Olum, i. e., by the race of Olioll Olum, who were at that period the dominant family of Munster. This prophecy has not been fulfilled, but it is very likely that it was generally believed, in the time of Feidhlim Mac Criomhthainn, king of Caiseal, that the southern race would remove St. Ruadhán's curse, and re-erect Teamhair, and the same opinion may have prevailed during the reign of Brian Borumha.

‡ It is not preserved by Leath Chlainn, i. e. by the inhabitants of the northern half of Ireland. From these lines it is quite evident that the kings of the northern or southern Uí Neill, or those of Leinster, did not acknowledge the claim of the race of Olioll Olun to the sovereignty of Ireland. Indeed, it appears that the controversy which took place between the bards of Ireland respecting the claims of the northern and southern Irish kings to supremacy and renown, about the beginning of the seventeenth century (when they were both prostrate), was but a continuation of disputes which had existed among them from the earliest ages. To sustain their arguments the Munster writers circulated various stories about the bravery of their kings, such as Toraidheacht Cheallachain Chaisil, and other exaggerated tracts; but these, though used to support the bardic disputes, 'as if they were genuine history, must now be submitted to a sterner historic test than appears to have been applied to them at that time. It would appear from Irish history that the northerns were generally more powerful (excepting only during the time of Brian Borumha), for they defeated the southern in most of the great battles that had taken place between them, from the battle of Magh Leana (fought A. D. 192), in which Conn of the Hundred Battles defeated Eoghan Mor, the father of Olioll Olun, to the battle of Bealach Mughna (in 908), where Flann Sionna defeated Cormac Mac Cuilleannain.

It is not preserved by Leath Chuimn^g,

To the men of Mumha are known.

There are three kings in great Mumha,
Whose tribute to Caiseal is not due,
The king of Gabhranⁱ, whose hostages are not to be seized on,
The king of Raithleann^k, the king of Loch Lein^l.

In the year 1185 the comparative warlike characteristics of those rival races of Leath Mhogha and Leath Chuimn were described as follows, in the partizan language of Giraldus Cambrensis, who held both in abhorrence: "Sicut ergo Borealis Hiberniæ bellica: sic semper Australis gens subdola. Illa laudis, hæc fraudis cupida. Illa Martis, hæc artis ope confisa. Illa viribus nititur, hæc versutiis. Illa præliis, hæc proditiõibus."—Hib. Exp. lib. ii. c. 18.

^o The tribute of Caiseal.—The tributes here mentioned are different from those mentioned in the first poem. The first were, probably, for the support of the king's household in time of peace; and these for the support of his household, and also of his troops, in time of war.

^p Muscraidhe.—See p. 42, note p, supra.

A thousand oxen and a thousand sheep and a thousand cloaks and a thousand milch-cows from the Deise.

A hundred cows from the Orbhraidhe, and a hundred white cloaks, and a hundred sows.

The Eoghanachts pay no tribute, for theirs are the lands which serve Caiseal. The Clama Chais, or [the people] of Raithleann, or of Gleann Amhain, or of Loch Lein, or of the Ui Fhiginnnte, or of Aine Cliach, pay no tribute; concerning which the highly-gifted son, Benean, composed this poem:

THE TRIBUTE OF CAISEAL^o have ye heard

For its heroes from all?

Its troops constantly receive them

Every year for ever.

Three hundred beeves from the Muscraidhe^p

On the field,—'tis no falsehood,

Three hundred hogs, not fit for journeying,

A hundred cloaks and a hundred cows.

Three hundred hogs from the men of Uaithne^q

To Caiseal without failure;

Three hundred mantles, all variegated,

With a hundred strong milch-cows.

Thirty hogs which are not able to rise,

Thirty beeves which are large,

Thirty cloaks from the fierce men of Ara^r,

A hundred young cows for [the sake of] drinking [their milk].

Sixty oxen for a good week's [feast],

Sixty smooth black wethers,

Sixty fine cows from the fine Seachtmhadh^s

For Caiseal of the companies.

[†] Orbhraidhe, Orbhraide in the text, but always now Orbhraíde, and anglicé Orrery, a barony in the north-west of the county of Cork. The tribe who gave their name to this territory were descended from Feridheach, the son of Fearghus, king of Uladh (Ulster), in the first century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 46. This territory is not mentioned in the first poem.

^u Dairfhine.—This was one of the tribenames of the family of O'h-Eidirsceoil (O'Driscolls), and their correlatives, who possessed a territory co-extensive with the diocese of "Ross," in the south-west of the county of Cork. In the first poem they are called Corca Luighe. See p. 46, note ^a, supra.

century. The country of Corcumruadh, as can be proved from various authorities, was co-extensive with the diocese of "Kilfenora," and comprised the present baronies of "Corcomroe" and "Burren," in the county of Clare. After the establishment of surnames, the two chieftains and rival families of this race took the surnames of O'Conchobhair (O'Conor), and O'Lochiainn (O'Loughlin), and in course of time divided the territory equally between them, O'Connor, the senior, retaining the western portion, which still retains the original name, and O'Lochlaim the eastern portion, which from its rocky surface is called Boirinn (Anglicè Burren, or Burrin). The territory of Corcumruadh is omitted in the first poem, but it is probable that Boirinn is substituted for it, in the same way as Dairbhre is put for Corca Dhuibhne.

^b Orbhraidhe, already mentioned in this poem, p. 64, note ^l, suprà.

^c The Eoḡhanachts.—These were the descendants of Eoḡhan Mor, the eldest son of Oilioll Olum, and ancestor of the family of Mac Carthaigh (Mac Carthys) and their correlatives, in south Munster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, p. iii. c. 67. Dr. O'Brien (Vall. Collect. p. 384), says that "all the tribes descended from Oilioll Olum by his three sons, Eoḡhan Mor, Cormac Cas, and Cian, were considered as free states, exempted from the payment of annual tribute for the support of the king's household."

 For to them belong the lands
 Which serve fair Caiseal^d.

The clann of Cas are not liable
 To the tribute of Caiseal of the companies;
 It is not due from Gleann Amhain
 Nor from red Raithlinn.

No tribute is due of the heroes of Lein^e
 Nor of the fierce Gabhair^f:
 No tribute is due of the Ui Fidhgheinte^g
 Nor of the noble Aine^h.

^f Gabhair, i. e. of Gabhran. See p. 46, note 1, suprà.

^g The Ui Fidhgheinte.—The people who bore this appellation possessed that portion of the county of Limerick lying to the west of the River Maigh (Maigue), besides the barony of "Coshma" in the same county. In the time of Mathghamhain (Mahon), king of Manster, and his brother Brian Borumha, Donnobhain (Donovan), the progenitor of the family of O'Donovan, was called king of this territory, but his race were driven from these plains by the Fitzgeralds, Burkes, and O'Briens, a few years anterior to 1201, when Amhlaoibh O'Donnobhain (Anliffe O'Donovan) was seated in Cairbre in the county of Cork, having a few years before effected a settlement there among the tribe of O' h-Eidirseoil (O'Driscolls) by force of arms. These people were exempt from tribute as being the seniors of the "Eugenian" line, being descended from Daire Cearba, the grandfather of the great monarch Criomhthann Mor Mac Fidhaigh. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, pp. 380, 381, and Cath Mhuighe Rath, pp. 338-340, note g.

k King of Gabhran.—See p. 40, note t.

m Two rings and two chess-boards.—

Dr. O'Brien renders this “two cloaks and two suits of military array” (Collectan. p. 375); and in his Irish Dictionary he explains Fitheal, “a full or complete armour, consisting of corslet, helmet, shield, buckler, and boots,” &c. But this meaning of the word seems drawn merely from the stores of his own imagination, as it never Ten steeds to the king of Ui Chonailh Ghabhra, and ten shields and ten swords and ten drinking-horns; and no hostage [is asked] from him except to swear by the hand of the king of Caiseal.

Seven steeds to the king of Ui Chairbre, and seven drinking-horns and seven swords and seven serving-youths and seven bondmen.

Eight drinking-horns to the hero [king] of Cliach, and eight swords and eight steeds, two rings and two chess-boards.

Seven steeds and seven drinking-horns and seven shields and seven swords to the king of Gleann Amhnach.

Eight steeds and eight swords and eight drinking-horns, with the office [of chief officer of trust] of a sovereign and monarch, to the king of the men of Uaithne.

Eight steeds to the king of Eile, eight shields and eight swords and eight drinking-horns and eight coats of mail.

Such are the stipends of the kings, as the poet said, i. e. Bencan :

YE LEARNED OF MUMHA the great,

If ye are mindful of the canon,

Arise, and proclaim in his house

The right of the king of Caiseal from his territories.

The first with him^l into another country

Belongs to the king of Dal Chaisj—I will not conceal it;

To take the rear of the king belongs to the Dal Chais of music, bore any meaning among the ancient or modern Irish, but a chess-board of a quadrangular form, marked with black and white spots. See Cormac's Glossary, in rocc. O'Reilly, who copies O'Brien verbatim in too many of his explanations, has avoided this, but he gives us an additional meaning for príccell, namely, a "philosopher," a meaning which he inferred from Cormac's conjectural derivation of the term, which states that the black and white spots on the board had a mystical signification.—See the passage from Cormac, cited p. 35, note ⁿ, suprà.

^u Ten horns, &c.—Dr. O'Brien translates this "ten golden cups," but "golden" is added by himself.

^o Unless Caiseal belong to him, i. e. when the king of Caiseal was of the Dal Chais. According to the Will of Oilíoll Olum, the kings of Caiseal were to be alternately elected from the descendants of his sons, Eoghan Mor and Cormac Cas. In the early ages the stock of Mac Carthaigh (the Mac Carthys), O'Ceallachain (the O'Callaghans), and O'Donmhadha (the O'Donoghoes), were the chiefs of Eoghanacht Chaisil; but immediately before the English invasion the tribe of Mac Carthaigh were by far the most powerful of all the Eoghanachts. P. O'Brien says that "the O'Donoghoes of Eoghanacht Chaisil were of a different stock from those of Loch Lein" (Collectan. vol. i. p. 375); but in this he is undoubtedly mistaken, for the family of O'Donmhadha (O'Donoghoes) of Loch Lein were the most royal family of that name in Munster, for their ancestor, Dubh-da-bhoireann, who was slain in 957, was king of Munster, and his son Domhnall commanded the forces of south Munster (Desmond) at the battle of Cluain-tarbh, in 1014.

^p Deise.—See p. 49, note ^k, and p. 66, note ^a, suprà. It will again be observed that ships are presented to the chiefs of territories verging on the sea.

^q Across the sea, i. e. imported. See p. 55, note ^a.

^s Ui Liathain.—This tribe derived their name and origin from Eochaidh Liathnach, the son of Daire Cearba. After the establishment of surnames, O'Liathain and O'h-Anmhadha were the chief families of this tribe. After the English invasion their territory was granted to Robert Fitzstephen, who granted it to Philip de Barry, as appears from the confirmation charter of king John, who, in the eighth year of his reign, confirmed to William de Barry, the son and heir of this Philip, "the three cantreds of Olethan, Muscherie-Dunegan, and Killede." Now, we learn from Giraldus (Hib. Exp. lib. ii. c. 18, 19) that when Fitzstephen and Milo de Cogan came to a partition, by lot, of the seven cantreds granted them by Henry II., the three cantreds to the east of the city of Cork fell to Fitzstephen, and the four to the west fell to the lot of De Cogan. We know also from Irish history, that the present village of Castle-Lyons, or Caislean U'i Liathain, and the island called Oilean mor Arda Neimhidh, now the "Great Island," near Cork, were in U'i Liathain, which gives us a good idea of its position and even extent, and from these facts we may infer with certainty that the three cantreds confirmed by King John, namely, "Olethan, Muscherie-Dunegan, and Killede," are included in the baronies of "Barrymore," "Kinatalloon," and "Imokilly," in the county of Cork, and "Coshmore" and "Coshbride" in that of Waterford. Harris asserts, in his edition of Ware's Antiquities, p. 50, that "Hy-Liathain is a territory in the south of the county of Waterford, in the barony of Decies, on the sea coast, opposite to Youghal. But this is unworthy of Harris, who ought to have known that "Olethan," which belonged first, after the Anglo-Norman invasion, to Fitzstephen, and passed from him to Barry, was not on the east side of the river of Eochail (Youghal), but on the west, for in the charter of Henry II. to Robert Fitzstephen and Milo de Cogan, he grants them the lands "as far as the water near Lismore, which runs between Lismore and Cork."

statute acres; but this territory was originally much more extensive, for we learn from Cormac's Glossary, in voce, that the mountains called Da Chioch Danam, now "the Pap mountains," were in this territory. See also Keating's History of Ireland, Haliday's Edit. p. 204.

^c Ui Ghabhra, i.e. the Ui Chonail Ghabhra, now the baronies of Conillo, in the west of the county of Limerick. After the establishment of surnames, the chief families of this race took the names of O'Coileain (Collins), O'Cinphaelaidh (Kinealy), O'Flanu-abhra (Flannery), and Mac Imeirġhe (Mac Eniry). Dr. O'Brien says, (Collect. vol. i.
 p. 377), "that Mac Emery and O'Sheehan of this race were descended from Mahon, an elder brother of Brian Borumha." But for this he had not sufficient authority, for, according to the pedigrees of the Ui Fidhġheinte (given in the Books of Leacan, and Bailean-mhota, and by Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh), and in O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, Mac Imeirġhe is set down as chief of Corea Mhuichet, a sept of the Ui Fidhġheinte; and the parish of "Castletown Mac Eniry" in the south of the county of Limerick, where he resided, is still called Corea Mhuichet. The same inaccurate writer asserts in his Irish Dictionary, voce Conall, that "Conall Gabhra, from whom the country of Ibh Conaill Gabhra derives its name, was the ancestor of the stock of the O'Conels, widely spread throughout the counties of Limerick, Kerry, and Cork;" but this is not supported by any authority; and, besides, it contradicts what the same writer says, in his Dissertation, &c. (Collect.

 vol. i. p. 380), where it is asserted, that "O'Shea, O'Connell, and O'Falvy are all descended from Core, son of Cairbre Musc, son of Conaire, son of Mogh Laimhe, king of Leath Chuinn." This latter statement is nearly correct, according to the Irish genealogical books, but again, the same writer (who appears to have had a bad memory) calls this same Cairbre Musc, "one Cairbre Musc, supposed son of a king of Meath in the beginning of the third century, and of whose progeny no account has ever been given." See his Dictionary, voce Muiscrith. If the pedigrees of the O'Sheas, O'Falvys, and O'Connells are traced to him, some account has been given of his descendants.

^d King of Brugh-righ, i. e. of the Ui Chairbre Aebhdha, who had their seat at Brugh-righ (Bruce), on the river Maigh (Maigue). Dr. O'Brien says, that "the king of Cairbre Aobhdha, who was O'Donovan, had his principal seat at Brugh-righ, and that his country was that now called Kenry, in the county of Limerick." (Collect. vol. i. p. 377). This assertion, which has been received as fact by all subsequent writers, is woefully incorrect, for "Kenry" is a small barony lying along the Shannon, in the north of the county of Limerick; whereas Brugh-righ, its supposed head-residence, is many miles distant from it, in the other end of the county. The fact is, that the country of the Ui Chairbre Aebhdha, of which O'Donnobhain was the chief, comprised the barony of "Coshma," the districts around "Bruce" and "Kilmallock" and the plains along the river Maigh (Maigue) on the west side, down to the Shannon. This appears from the traditions in the county which state that O'Donnobhain resided at Brugh-righ, and Cromadh (Croom) on the river Maigh (Maigue); from the Feilire Aenghuis, at 26th March, which places Cill Da Chealloc (Kilmallock), in Ui Chairbre; and from O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, which states that O'Donnobhain of Dun Chuire (a name for Brugh-righ, as being one of the seats of Core, king of Munster) possessed, free of tribute, ἡν ἰὸρ the lands extending along the Maigh (Maigue), and the plains down to the Scannain (Shannon),—να ἰὸρ ἰὸρ ἰὸρ ἰὸρ ἰὸρ ἰὸρ. See the Battle of Mugh Ragh, p. 340.

That Caenraidhe (Kenry) was a part of Ui Chairbre Aebhdha is highly probable, but we have the authority of O'h-Uidhrin to show that O'Macchallainn (Mulholland), was the chief of Caenraidhe, and that near him was O'Bearga, in the district of Ui Rosa, (now the parish of Iveruss, ἰὸρ ἰὸρ, on the Shannon, and in the barony of Kenry). These were sub-chiefs to O'Donnobhain as chief of all Ui Fidhgheinte, as he frequently was, and perhaps as chief of Ui Chairbre Aebhdha also.

* Hero of Aine, i. e. the king or chief of Eoghanacht Aine Cliach. See p. 39, note ¹, suprà.

[†] King of the Forthuatha, i. e. the king of Fera Muighe, i. e. the tribe of O'Dubhagain (O'Dugans), descended from the celebrated druid Mogh Ruith, and here called Forthuatha, as being strangers placed centrally between the Ui Fidhgeinte and the Eoghanachts of Gleann Amnach, who were two tribes of the royal blood of Oilioll Olum.

[‡] King of Gleann Amnach, i. e. of Eoghanacht Gleanna Amnach. This was the country of a branch of the tribe of O'Caoinh (O'Keefes), comprising the country about Gleann Amnach, Glanworth, barony of Fermoy, Cork. Before the English invasion, O'Caoinh and O'Dubhagain possessed the regions now called "Fermoy, Condons, and Clangibbons;" but the boundary between them (O'Keefe and O'Dugan) could not now be determined; all we know is, that O'Dubhagain was between O'Caoinh and the Ui Fidhgeinte, and consequently to the north of them. After the English invasion the country of Fera Muighe Feine was granted to Fleming, from whom it passed, by marriage, to the Roches, and it is now usually called Criche Roisteach, or Roche's country.

[§] Uathne.—See p. 45, note ², suprà.

[¶] Eile.—This was the name of a tribe and an extensive territory, all in the ancient Mumha or Munster. They derived the name from Eile, the seventh in descent from Cian, the son of Oilioll Olum. According to O'h-Uidhrin, this territory was divided into eight "tuatha," ruled by eight petty chiefs, over whom O'Carbhaill (O'Carroll) was head or king. The ancient Eile (Ely) comprised the whole of Eile Ui Chearbhaill (Ely O'Carroll) which is now included in the King's county, and comprises the baronies of Clonlisk and Ballybritt; also the baronies of Ikerrin and Elyogarty, in the county of Tipperary. The boundary between "Ely O'Carroll" and the ancient Midhe (Meath) is determined by that of the diocese of Killaloe with the diocese of Meath, for that portion of the King's county which belongs to the diocese of Killaloe was "Ely O'Carroll," and originally belonged to Munster. The other portions of the original Eile, such as "Ikerrin" and "Elyogarty," were detached from O'Carbhaill, shortly after the English invasion, and added to "Ormond;" but the native chieftains O'Meachair (O'Meagher) and O'Fogartaigh (O'Fogarty), were left in possession, but subject to the Earl of Ormond. Sir Charles O'Carroll, in his letter to the Lord Deputy in 1595, asserts, that "the Earl of Ormond had no right to any part of the country lying north of Barnane Ely" (now the Devil's Bit mountain), but this cedes him "Elyogarty," which appears to have been his indisputable property since the time of Edward III. According to O'h-Uidhrin, O'Fogartaigh, the chief of the southern Eile, i. e. Eile Fhogartaigh (Elyogarty) is not of the race of the Eleans, but descended from Eochaidh Baildearg (king of Thomond in St. Patrick's time); from which we may perceive that the southern Eile had been wrested from the original proprietors before the English invasion by a sept of the Dal Chais, but nothing has been yet discovered to determine when or how the ancestors of the family of O'Fogartaigh obtained it.

The stipend of the king of Drung^w, which is not small,
From the king of Eire,—'tis not contemptible,
Three curved narrow swords
And three ships very beautiful.

The stipend of the king of Loch Lein^x
From the king of Eire of noble mind,
Ten horses of bay colour,
Ten ships, ten coats of mail.

The stipend of the king of Feorainn Floinn^y
From the sons of Oilioll Olum,
Ten caparisoned steeds out of the stud
And his own graceful satin cochal.

The stipend of the king of Leim na Con^z
From the king of Caiseal,—a fair condition,
His own befitting beauteous ship,
A steed, a sword, a trophy drinking-horn.

The stipend of the king of fair Gabhran^a
From the king of great and merry Munster,
A pleasing distinction in his crowded house,
This king is entitled to sit by his side.

And at the time he [Caiseal] goes to his own [Gabhran's] house
He [Gabhran] is entitled to a steed and trappings too,
And of the number who go [with Caiseal] eastward
A steed and dress for every man.

The stipend of the king of Brugh-righ^b
From the king of Eire without sorrow,

^z The king of Leim an Chon, now always Leim na Con (i. e. fem.) Saltus Cuoni, the king of Corca Bhaiscinn, in the south-west of the county of Clare, not of Leim Con, in Carbery, as asserted by ¹⁴⁹ From the Eoir to Dunha Dreasa.—The tract of land extending from the River “Nore” (an Eoir or an Fheoir) to a mound near Cnoc Grafann (Knockgraffon), Tipperary. This comprises the greater part of the ancient Ossory, which was called Laighin Deas-ghabhair by the ancient Irish, and said to have been forfeited to Munster by the Lagenians for their murder of Fearghus Scannal; or, according to other accounts, of Eidirseal, the father of the monarch Conaire Mor. See Book of Leacan, fol. 225, b.; 229 b.

on the west bank of the River Maigh (Maigne), in the barony of Upper Connello and county of Limerick, about four miles to the north of Kilmallock. There are extensive ruins of earthen forts here, said by tradition to have been erected by Oilíoll Olum, the ancestor of the O'Donovans. There are also the ruins of a circular wall defended with square towers. The circular wall is evidently very ancient, and is said by tradition to have been built by an O'Donnobhain, before the English invasion; but the square towers are evidently several centuries more modern, and are said to

From the Eoir to Dumha Dreasaⁱ.

The eric of Fearghus the king,
Both in jewels and territory;
They obtained in full satisfaction for his death
South Laighin even to the sea.

Of the right of Caiseal in its power
Are Brugh-righ^k and the great Muilthead^l, Seanchua^m the beautiful, Ros Raedaⁿ the bright,
And to it belongs the noble [fort of] Chuain Uamha^o.

Cathair Chmuis^p, Cathair Fhionnabhrach^q, Cathair Thuaiḡhe^r with its appurtenance have been erected by that branch of the famous family of Lacy or De Lacy, descended from William Gorm, the son of Sir Hugh De Lacy, by the daughter of Ruaidhri O'Conchobhair (Roderic O'Conor), the last monarch of all Ireland of the Milesian race. Brugh-righ is mentioned the first in order in this list, as it was the principal seat of Oilioll Olun, the ancestor of the kings and dominant families of Munster.

^l Muilthead.—Muilthead, now applied to a river in the north-west of the county of Limerick, is a corruption of this name.

^m Seanchua, Anglicè "Shanahoe," in the county of Limerick.

ⁿ Ros Raeda.—Unknown to the Ed.

^o Chuain Uamha, i. e. the Lawn or Meadow of the Cave, Anglicè "Cloyne," the head of an ancient bishop's see, in the county of Cork.

^p Cathair Chmuis.—Unknown to the Ed.

^q Cathair-Fhionnabhrach.—This is the name of a remarkable stone fort, of the kind called "Cyclopean," near the village of Cill Fionnabhrach (Kilfenora), in the county of Clare, also the head of an ancient diocese.

* Cathair Ghleana Amnách, i.e. the stone fort of Gleann Amnách, which is the ancient and real name of "Glanworth," in "Roche's country," in the north of the county of Cork. See Smith's Natural and Civil History of Cork, book ii. c. 7.

† Cathair Chinn Chon, Anglicè "Caherkincon," a (Cyclopean) stone fort near Rockbarton, the seat of Lord Guillamore, in the barony of Small County, and county of Limerick. There are extensive remains of such stone forts in this immediate neighbourhood, which indicate its having been anciently a place of importance.

^u Dun Fir Aen Cholga.—Unidentified.

^v Dun Gaír.—This fort was on the hill of "Doon," over Loch Gaír (Lough Gur), barony of Small County, Limerick. See Fitzgerald's Stat. Acc. Limerick. This hill and lake were fortified by Brian Borumha, in the tenth century.

^w Cathair Meathais.—This was probably the ancient name of the great (Cyclopean) fortress now called Cathair na Steige (Stague Fort), situated in the parish of Kilerohane, barony of Dunkerron, in the county of Kerry. See Vall. Collect. vol. vi., and Baron Foster's model in the Museum of the Dublin Society.

^x Teamhair Shubha.—This was probably another name for Teamhair Luachra, which was the name of a fort near Beal Atha na Teamhrach, in the parish of Dysart, near Castle Island, in the county of Kerry.

^y Air Bile, or, as it is written in the prose, Ard Bili, i. e. the height or hill of the tree. There is a place of this name near "Bally-mack-elligott," in the barony of Clanmaurice, and county of Kerry.

^z Aenach m-Bearrain.—Perhaps the fort N. by W. of Barrane, four miles E. of Kilrush, in Clare.

^a Magh Caille.—Unknown to the Ed.

^b Ard Chonaill, i. e. the height or hill of Conaill.—Unknown to the Editor.

^c Ard Mic Conaill, Ard Ruidhe, Tuaisceart Muighe, Magh Sairc. These places, being mentioned immediately before the

All belong to it, [and] Aill Mic Cuirr^m.

Aras, are evidently in the county of Clare, but the Editor has not identified them.

^d The three Aras, i. e. the three islands of Ara (Arann) in the Bay of Galway, which originally belonged to Corcumruadh. The largest of these islands was granted by Aenghus, king of Munster, to St. Eanna, who built several churches upon it. For some account of the forts on these islands, see O'Flaherty's Iar-Connacht, by Hardiman, pp. 77, 78.

^e Aenach Cairpre, i. e. the fair of the territory of Cairbre. This is the place now called Mainister an Aenaigh, Anglicè Mannisteranenagh, i. e. the Monastery of the Fair, from a great monastery erected by the Ui Bhriain (O'Briens), a short time previous to the English invasion. It is situated in the barony of "Pubblebrian," in the county of Limerick.

^f Druim Mor, i. e. the great ridge. This is probably the Dromore near Mallow.

^g Druim Caein, i. e. dorsum amaranum, "Drunkean," but which of the many places so called, in Munster, has not been determined.

^h Cathair Chuire, i. e. the stone fort of Core; probably the ancient name of Cathair-gheal, a great fort near Cahersiveen.

ⁱ Mur-bolcan, i. e. the inlet "Trabolgan," east of the entrance of Cork harbour.

^k Geibhtine, now Eas Geibhtine (Askeaton), on the Dacil (Deel).

^l Grafann, now Cnoc Grafann, Anglicè Knoekgrallon, a townland giving name to a parish in the barony of Middlethird and county of Tipperary. There is a very large moat here surrounded by a fosse. This was the principal seat of the Ui Suileabhain (O'Sullivans), till the year 1192, when they were driven thence by the English, who erected a castle close to the moat. For some historical references to this place the reader is referred to Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Cormac mac Airt, and the Annals of the Four Masters, A. D. 1192.

^m Aill Mic Cuirr, i. e. the cliff of Mac Cuirr. Unknown to the Editor.

ⁿ Magh Naei, &c.—These, which were names of plains on which the king of Munster had forts, are unidentified.

^o Caechan Boirne.—This was the name of a fort in Boirim (Burren), in the county of Clare, where, though there are countless (Cyclopean) forts, there is none bearing this name at present.

^p Mur-mhagh, i. e. sea plain.—This is probably “Murvy,” in the great Island of Ara.

^q Magh Eanaigh Rosa.—Unknown to the Editor.

^r Tuaim n-Eidhin.—Unknown to the Editor.

^s Asal.—This fort was at Cnoc Droma Asail, now Tory Hill, near Croom, in the county of Limerick.

^t Eibhleao.—This was a fort in Sliabh Eibhliune, in the county of Tipperary, adjoining the barony of “Coonagh,” in the county of Limerick.

^u Ucht-na-rioghna, i. e. the breast of the queen. Unknown to the Editor.

^v Cuilleann, now Cuilleam O g-Cuanach, in the barony of Clanwilliam and county of Tipperary, but originally, as its name indicates, in the territory of Ui Chuanach, which is supposed to be included in the present barony of “Coonagh,” in the county of Limerick.

^w Cua.—This seat was at Sliabh Cua, in the county of Waterford, a short distance to the south of Clonmel. See p. 16, note ^t, suprà.

^x Claire.—This was the name of a conspicuous hill situated immediately to the east of Duntryleague, in the barony of Coshlea, and county of Limerick. There are, however, two forts still called Dun g-Claire, said to have been regal residences of the kings of Munster; one now called Lios Dun g-Claire, i. e. the fort Dun g-Claire, situated on the boundary between the townlands of Glenbroham and Glenlara, in the barony of Coshlea, and county of Limerick; and the other in the townland of Farrannacarriga, parish of Ballynacourty, barony of Corcaguiny, and county of Kerry.

^y Inneoin.—This place is now called mullaic Inneoina, i. e. the summit of Inneoin, Anglicè Mullaghimone, a townland in the parish of Newchapel, near the town of Clonmel, barony of Iffa and Offa East, county of Tipperary. Here are the ruins of a castle, which probably occupy the site of the more ancient fort. See Keating, in the reign of Cormac mac Airt.

^z Aine, now Cnoc Aine, a conspicuous hill in a parish of the name, in the barony of Small County, Limerick. There is a fort on the summit of this hill which commands an extensive prospect of the country in every direction. For some account of the places which can be seen from it, see Book of Leinster, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2, 18, fol. 105.

^a Ord.—Unknown to the Editor.

^b Uilleann Eaton.—Unknown to the Ed.

^c Loch Ceann, i. e. lake of the heads.—Unknown to the Editor.

^d Ceann Nathrach, head or hill of the adder or adders, the ancient name of Ceann Sleibhe, a beautiful mountain over the lake of Inchiquin, near Corofin, in the county of Clare. From this place Aenghus Cinn Nathrach, the fifth son of Cas, and ancestor of the family of O'Deaghaidh (O'Dea), took his cognomen.

^e Rafann.—See Grafann, p. 91, note 1, suprà.

^f Druim Caecin.—This was probably the name of a subdivision of Sliabh Caecin, now Sliabh Riach, on the borders of the counties of Limerick and Cork.

^g Druim Finghin.—This is the name of a long ridge of high ground extending from near Castle Lyons in the county of Cork, to the Bay of Dungarvan in the county of Waterford, and dividing the barony of Decies within Drum, from that of Decies without Drum [i. e. without or outside Druim Finghin].

^h Treada-na-riogh, i. e. Tre-dui na riogh, the triple-fossed fort of the kings. This was probably the ancient name of the great moat at Kiltinan, near Kilmallock, in the county of Limerick, which consists of a moat placed in the centre, and three outer ramparts of circumvallation. The Editor was once of opinion that this was one of the forts called Dun g-Claire, but he has been convinced of the contrary by the existence elsewhere, and not distant, of a fort called Dun g-Claire.¹

^k Rath Faeladh, i. e. Fraeladh's rath, or earthen fort.—This is probably the ancient name of Rath Gacla, or "Rathkeale," in the county of Limerick.

^l Rath Arda, i. e. the fort or rath of the height. This is evidently the place called Rath Arda Suid, in the Annals of the Four Masters, A. M. 305, which is that now called Rath-Suid, a townland situated in the parish of Donaghmore, near the city

II.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF CRUACHAIN.

OF THE REVENUE of Connacht down here, as Benean has related:

The rents and stipends of Connacht, i. e. the great tribute of Connacht both refection and escort: first to Cruachain:

From Umhall the tributes of Connacht are first presented to Cruachain:

Five score cows and five score hogs and five score mantles from Umhall.

Five score oxen and five score milch-cows and three score hogs and sixty cloaks from the Greagraidhe.

Two hundred and forty cloaks and two hundred cows and a hundred and twenty hogs from the Cōnmaicne.

A hundred cows and a hundred oxen from the Ciarraidhe; also sixty red cloaks and sixty hogs from the Ciarraidhe.

Six times fifty milch-cows, three times fifty hogs, three times fifty cloaks from the Luighne every May-day, and three times fifty oxen; and this is not in consequence of inferiority of [race in] those tribes, but in consequence of the liability of the grass and land.

A hundred and forty cows and seven hundred caercha (sheep)—or caera iarainn (masses of iron)—three hundred and fifty hogs and three hundred and fifty oxen from the Corca.

A hundred and fifty red cloaks, a hundred and fifty hogs and a hundred and fifty oxen from the Dealbhna, and this for maintaining them in their territory.

Seventy cloaks, seventy hogs from the Ui Maine for their territory.

The Ui Briuin and the Siol Muircadhaigh and the Ui Fiachrach and the Cineal Aedha are free tribes, and they are equally noble as the king, and they do not go upon an expedition or hosting except for pay;

^a Tribute—eineaclann. This word is used by Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh in the sense of stipend or salary; but when applied to a king it means "a tribute paid to him in consideration of his protection." It sometimes means eric or fine.

^b Cruachain.—Vide supra, p. 20, note 1; p. 34, note °. For the remains still to be seen at this place the reader is further referred to the Editor's translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, pp. 204–206.

These two divisions were in former times usually called "the Owles" (Ools) by English writers, and absurdly Latinized Pomum, as "O'Malley de Pomo," State Papers, temp. Henry VIII. vol. ii. part iii. p. 4, A. D. 1515. Since the introduction of surnames the family of O'Maille (O'Malley) have been chiefs in this district. They are descended from Conall Oirbsean, one of the twenty-four sons of Brian, the common an-

If they happen to be in exile in another territory, they are to sit at the right shoulder of the king of Caiseal, or of the king of Nas, or of the king of Eamhain Macha. Of which things the gifted scion Benean sang:

The ancient inhabitants of this district were descended from Aenghus Fionn, the son of Fearghus, king of Ulster in the first century.

^e Conmaicne, i. e. descendants of Conmhac, son of Fearghus, ex-king of Ulster, in the first century, by Meadhbh, queen of Connacht. There were three territories of this name in Connacht, namely, Conmaicne Chineal Dubhain, now the barony of Dunmore, in the north of the county of Galway; Conmaicne Cuile Toladh, now the barony of Kilmaine, in the south of the county of Mayo; and Conmaicne Mara, now the barony of Ballynahinch, in the north-west of the county of Galway. It should be remarked that before the Dalcassian families, called Dealbhna, settled in West or Iar Connacht, the Conmaicne Mara, or maritime Conmaicne, had possession of all that part of the present county of Galway lying west of Loch Measca (Mask) and Loch Oirbsean (Corrib), and between Galway and the harbour of Cael Shaile Ruadh (Killary), all which district has its old name still revived or preserved in the corrupted form of "Connamara." See Hardiman's edition of O'Flaherty's Iar-Connacht, pp. 31, 92, &c. &c.

^f Ciarraidhe. — These were also descended from Fearghus, ex-king of Ulster, and derive their name and origin from Ciar, one of the illegitimate sons of Fearghus, by Meadhbh, queen of Connacht. The Ciarraidhe of Connacht had been seated in Munster for some centuries before they removed to Connacht. According to a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 17, p. 875, they removed to Connacht in the reign of Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna the eighth Christian king of Connacht, under the conduct of Cairbre, son of Conaire. As the account of the Ciarraidhe of Connacht given in that manuscript is very curious, and determines the situation of an ancient Irish church, the position of which has much puzzled modern writers, the Editor is tempted here to present the reader with a literal translation of it.

"When first did the Ciarraidhe come into Connacht? Not difficult. In the time of Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna. Which of them came in first? Not difficult. Coirbri, son of Conairi, who came from the south of Munster, whence he had been expelled. He came with all his people to Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmchárna. Coirbri had a famous daughter, and king Aedh asked her of her father. She came one time to her father's house, and her father conceiving great grief in her presence, she asked him whence his grief arose. 'My being without lands in exile,' said he. Messengers afterwards arrived from the king to see the daughter, but she resolved not to go to the king until he should give a good tract of land to her father. 'I will give him,' said Aedh, 'as much of the wooded lands to the west as he can pass round in one day, and St. Caclainn, the pious, shall be given as a guarantee of it.' Coirbri afterwards went round a great extent of that country, according to the mode directed, and finally returned to his house, and settled his people in these lands. The men of Connacht greatly criminated Aedh for the too great extent of land, as they deemed, which he had given away, and said that Coirbri should be killed. 'This cannot be done,' said Aedh, 'for Caclainn is guarantee for himself and for his land. But, however, let some beer be made by you for him, and give him a poisonous draught in that beer, that he may die of it.' A feast was, therefore, afterwards prepared. This whole affair was revealed by the Lord to St. Caclainn, and she came to the feast.

'Why hast thou violated my guarantee?' said she to Aedh. 'I will violate thee as regards thy kingdom.' 'Accept thy own award in compensation for it,' said the king. 'I will,' said Caclainn. 'Pass thy sentence then,' said the king. 'I will,' said she. 'Because it is through the medium of beer thou soughtest to destroy Coirbri, may the king of Connacht meet decline or certain death if ever he drink of the beer of the Ciarraidhi.' Hence it came to pass that the Ciarraidhi never brew any beer for the kings of Connacht. 'Grant land to myself,' said the nun. 'Choose it,' said the king. The Tearmónn Mor was afterwards given, where her church is at the present day."

St. Caclainn, who was of the race of Ciar, son of Fearghus, is still held in the highest veneration in the territories of Ciarraidhe Aci (in the west of the county of Roscommon), and Ciarraidhe Locha na n-Airneadh (in the barony of Costello, and county of Mayo). Her church is still sometimes called Tearmónn Caclainne, and sometimes Tearmónn Mor. It is situate in the parish of "Kilkeevin," in the territory of Ciarraidhe Aci, about one mile to the east of where it is stated that the English and the people of Munster, having gone into the province of Connacht to attack O'Neill (who had gone thither to assist the sons of Ruaidhri O'Conchobhair), attempted to plunder this church of Tearmonn Caelainne, but that they were slaughtered through the miracles of the saint. We are, however, informed by the Annals of Kilro-of Ireland went to Connacht to assist William Burke, and succeeded in burning Tearmonn Caelainne, in despite of the peo-other direction to "Cloonaff," adjoining Lord Mountsandford's demesne; and also Ciarraidhe Airtich, which is still well known, and comprises the parishes of Tibohine and Kilnamanagh, in the modern grand jury barony of "Frenelapark," in the north-west of the county of Roscommon.

§ Great the tribute. It will be observed that the kings of Connacht contrived to make the Ciarraidhe and other tribes, who had migrated from Munster, pay more than a rateable tribute for their territory. See the tribute paid by the Luighne, the descendants of Cormac Gaileanga, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster, and by the Dealblma, who were of the race of Cormac Cas, son of the same Oilioll. See note ^o, p. 106, infra.

^b Luighne.—These derived their name and origin from Lnigh, son of Cormac Gaileang, just mentioned, and were otherwise called Gaileanga from the cognomen of their ancestor. The exact limits of their territory are preserved in those of the diocese of Achadh Chonaire (Achony) in the counties of Sligo and Mayo. The name Luighne is still preserved in that of the barony of "Lynny" in the county of Sligo, which was the territory of the family of O'h-Ara (O'Hara); and that of Gaileanga, their aliàs name, in that of the barony of "Gallen," in the county of Mayo; but these modern baronies do not comprise all the territory of the Luighne or Gaileanga, for we have the clearest evidence that the entire of Sliabh Lughha, which forms about the northern half of the barony of Costello, belonged to O'Gadhra (O'Gara) and was a part of the country of the Luighne or Gaileanga. On the increasing power of the Anglo-Norman families of Jordan de Exeter, and Nangle or Costello, the O'Gadhra were driven out of their original territory, and they acquired a new settlement for themselves in the territory of the Greagraidhe ("Coolavin," as already stated).

ⁱ But the grass and the land.—The territory of Luighne or Gaileanga (for they were originally synonymous) anciently belonged to an enslaved tribe of the Firbolgs (called "Gaileans" and "Damnonians"), who inhabited this territory down to the third century, when Cormac Gaileang, after having incurred the censure of his father Tadhg, in Munster, fled thither and obtained a grant of this Firbolg territory from his kinsman Cormac mac Airt, monarch of Ireland, subject, however, to the heavy tributes which had been paid by the dispossessed Aitheach Tuatha (Attacots). See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, c. 69.

^k Corca.—The Editor knows no tribe of this name in Connacht except Corca Achian and Corca Firtri, who were both of the royal race of Eochaidh Muighmheadhan, and Corca Mogha (in Uí Maine), descended from Buan, the son of the druid Mogh Ruith; D. Mac Fírb. MS. Geneal. p. 535. That district is now supposed to be co-extensive with the parish of Kilkerrin, near Dunmore, in the north of Galway; but this small territory could not have paid the immense tribute mentioned in the text.

^l King of Magh Aei.—The king of Connacht was so called from the situation of his palace of Cruachain in the Plain of Magh Aei, or Campus Connacia, now Machaire Chonnacht, a beautiful plain in the county of Roscommon, extending from near the town of Roscommon to the verge of the barony of Boyle, and from the bridge of "Cloonfree," near Strokestown, westwards to Castlereagh. These are the present limits of this plain, according to tradition, but it would appear from the position of Ciarraidhe Aei, that this plain extended farther to the west.

^m*No light award.*—The Irish word bán is used to denote blank in such compounds as the present; as bán-máiom, a defeat caused by panic or terror, without shedding blood; bán-máppa, i. e. martyrdom effected by subduing the passions, without shedding blood.

ⁿ*Dealbhna.*—The Dealbhna (Delvins) are descended from Sumann, son of Lughaidh Dealbhaeth, the third son of Cas, ancestor of the family of O'Briain, of North Munster. Their possessions in Connacht comprised the present barony of "Moycullen" in the county of Galway, which was anciently called Dealbhna Feadhá, and Dealbhna Tire da Loch, from its situation between Loch Oirbsean (Corrib), and Loch Lurgan, or the Bay of Galway; Dealbhna Cuile Fabhair, otherwise called Muintir Fathaidh, situate on the east side of Loch Corrib, and comprising fourteen Bailes or townlands, which belonged to the family of O'Fathartaigh, "Faherty;" and Dealbhna Nuadhat, seated between the rivers Suca (Suck) and Sionnain (Shannon); nearly all included in the barony of "Athlone," in the county of Roscommon. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 82; and Annals of the Four Masters, at the years 751, 816, 1142; D. Mac Firisigh's Genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), p. 345; and Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 83. The family of Mac Conroi (now "King"), O'h-Adhnaidh (Hyney), and O'Fathartaigh (O'Faherty), were the chief families of this race after the establishment of surnames. The tribe of Dealbhna Nuadhat sank under the Ui Maine before the establishment of surnames. The last notice of them, in the Annals of the Four Masters, occurs under the year 751. There were other territories called Dealbhna, in the ancient Meath, concerning whom see notes further on.

° It is not for ignobility of the men, that is, although the Dealbhna pay a great tribute to the king of Connacht, they are not regarded by him as slaves, as were the Firbolg tribes who preceded them, because they are of the royal blood of Munster; but having, by consent of the king, settled in lands subject to heavy tribute at the period of their settlement, they were obliged to pay the tributes which had been rendered by their enslaved predecessors.—See Tribes and Customs of the Uí Maine, p. 85, note f.

^q For their country, that is, because the Ui Maine (Nepotes Manii, the Ulster tribe) were permitted by the king of Connacht to subdue the Firbolgs, who paid the tribute of an enslaved people. The former, therefore, were obliged to pay the same tribute, though they were considered noble, as being of the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles.

race of Muireadhach Muilleathan, king of Connacht. See the Introduction. After the establishment of surnames, the principal families of this race, who were the most distinguished of the Uí Briuin, were those of O'Conchobhair (O'Conors) of Magh Aei, kings of Connacht; of Mac Diarmaid (Mac Dermots) of Magh Lurg (Moylurg); of Mac Oireachtaigh (Geraghtys), chiefs of Muintir Roduibh; of O'Fionnachtaigh, chiefs of Clanna Conmhuighe (Clanconway); and various other collateral families.

^t Uí Fiachrach.—There were two tribes of this name in Connacht, descended from Fiachra, the brother of the Irish monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages. The more powerful tribe of the name, the northern Uí Fiachrach, possessed the present baronies of "Carra," "Erris," and "Tirawley," in the county of Mayo, and the barony of Tir Fhiachrach (Tireragh), in the county of Sligo. After the establishment of surnames, the families of O'Dubhda and O'Caemhain were the most distinguished of this tribe.—See the Tribes and Customs, &c., of the Uí Fiachrach, passim. The other Uí Fiachrach of Connacht, the Uí Fiachrach Aidhne (south Uí Fiachrach), were seated in the south-west of the county of Galway, and their territory was exactly co-extensive with the diocese of Cill Mhic Duach (Kilmacduagh), as we learn from the Life of St. Colman Mac Duach (H. 2, 16, p. 495), who was their patron, and all whose territory was placed by Guaire Aidhne, king of Connacht, in his bishopric about the year 610. in that place was founded Cill Mic Duach, so that all Aidhne, and the race of Guaire, son of Colman, belong to him [Mac Duach] for ever." The principal families of this tribe after the establishment of surnames, were those of O'h-Eidhin (O'Heynes), O'Clerys (O'Clerys), and Mac Giolla Ceallaigh (Kilkellys), who were descended from king Guaire Aidhne, and of O'Seachnasaigh (O'Shaughnessys), who sprung from Aedh, the uncle of king Guaire. St. Colman, the patron saint of this tribe, was the son of Duach, who was the son of Ainmire, son of Conall, son of Eoghan Aidhne, the ancestor of the Ui Fiachrach Aidhne.

^u Cineal Aedha, i. e. the tribe of Aedh. This was the tribe-name of O'Seachnasaigh, a subsection of the Ui Fiachrach Aidhne. Most modern writers have spoken of the Cineal Aedha and Ui Fiachrach Aidhne as if they were a different race, but the most ancient pedigrees make the Cineal Aedha a subdivision of the Ui Fiachrach Aidhne. This incorrectness became general among the Irish writers. After the English invasion O'h-Eidhin and O'Seachnasaigh became independent of each other, when the former, being the senior, and of the race of Guaire, took the title of chief of the Ui Fiachrach Aidhne, and the latter the title of chief of Cineal Aedha.

^v For the sake of stipend.—That is, these tribes were considered the king's relatives, and they were not bound to serve the king in his wars except for pay; and if any of them were killed in battle while in the service of the king of Connacht, the king was to pay to his tribe mulct or eric for him, according to his dignity. This was a great privilege enjoyed by the descendants of the brothers of the monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages in Connacht.

^w I shall state it as it is.—The writer had probably an older poem before him, which he shaped into such form as to describe the tribes as they stood in his own, not in St. Benean's time. See the Introduction.

Whenever kingship shall not be in the north
 With the race of Fiachra and the noble Guaire,
 They are entitled,—it is no trifling privilege,
 To sit by the side of the supreme-king of Connacht.

Should it happen that a good man of them
 Should leave his territory through injustice,
 To sit by the side of the king of whatsoever province
 Is the right of each king of their kings.

Well has Benean exactly found
 This knowledge—it is no injustice;
 I shall state it as it is^w,
 Ye noble people, hear it ! . . . HEARKEN TO A HISTORY.

OF THE STIPENDS of the chieftainries of Connacht here from the supreme king of Cruachain: for it is for the lands and stipends they pay tributes, and not for ignobility of race, for the chiefs of all are noble brethren. And it is in right of that [i. e. their equality of blood] that every one of them may approach to assume all sovereignty and kingship alike, if not debarred by the defilement of the slaying of a kinsman, or the oppressing of saints, or the renouncement of baptism, and it is by these alone his right to sovereignty should depart from him: and hence it is that they pay tribute to and receive stipend from a [regal] house which has not turned back or separated from God.

The king of Siol Muireadhaigh is entitled to the ring and dress of the king of Connacht, and to his shield and sword and armour.

Five steeds and five swords and five ships and five coats of mail to the king of Umhall.

Six shields and six swords and six steeds and six tunics and six drinking-horns to the king of Greagraidhe.

Five drinking-horns to the king of Dealbhna.

Four tunics, four swords, four bondmen, four women, four coats of mail, two rings and two chess-boards and ten drinking-horns and ten steeds to the king of Connaiene.

Seven cloaks and seven tunics and seven steeds and seven hounds to the king of Ui Maine.

Ten steeds and ten cloaks and ten drinking-horns and ten hounds to the king of Luighne.

Five steeds and five matala and five swords, five coats of mail, two rings, ten steeds, ten swords and five drinking-horns and ten bondmen and ten chess-boards to the king of Ui Briuin.

Three drinking-horns and three swords and three steeds and ten rings and ten chess-boards to the king of the northern Ui Fiachrach.

Seven bondmen and seven bondwomen and seven drinking-horns and three swords and three hounds to the king of Cineal Aedha.

Three tunics and three drinking-horns and three steeds to the king of Partraidhe.

Thus are estimated the worthiness and the title to stipends of the kings of the territories of Connacht. Of them the gifted son Banean composed this [poem].

THE STIPENDS of the province of Connacht

In a fair book I have seen,

Which are given to his chieftainries in the north
By the king of Connacht, head of the great host.

Entitled is the man who is best of them

Of the Siol Muireadhaigh^x from the king
To a ring and a dress and a steed,
To a shield, sword and coat of mail.

Entitled is the king of Umhall^y, without condition,

To five steeds in his country without heaviness,
Five polished swords of battle,
Five ships, five coats of mail.

Entitled is the king of Dealbhna^z of Druim Leith

To six swords and six shields,
Six steeds, six tunics, with gold [ornaments],
And six drinking-horns for banquets.

Entitled is the king of fair Greagraidhe^a

To six weapons and six tunics,
Six bondmen, six bondwomen,
Six completely beautiful coats of mail.

^c Uí Maine.—See p. 106, note ^p, suprà.

^d Horses, Gabhra.—It is stated in Cormac's Glossary that when this word is applied to a horse it should be written with an o; and indeed it generally is, but the scribes here have Gabhar in the text of both copies of the Book of Rights. Cormac says: "Gabhar, written with an a, quasi capra; but when written with an o it is applied to a horse, and it is said to be a corruption of the Welsh 'Goor.'" [Quare gorwydd?] The author of the Life of Aedh or St. Aidus, published by Colgan, at 28th February, translates Lochgabhra by stagnum equi; and Colgan remarks (note 14, p. 422) that gabhar is a very ancient Scotch and British word for equus, which is each in modern Irish.

^e Luighne.—See p. 103, note ^h, suprà.

Entitled is the king of hospitable Conmaicne^b
 To ten drinking-horns on going into his drinking-house,
 Ten swift steeds on which to mount,
 Two rings and two chess-boards.

Entitled is the king of Ui Maine^c the illustrious
 To seven cloaks, seven horses^d over the valley,
 Seven hounds for the purpose of the chase
 And seven deep-red tunics.

Entitled is the king of Luighne^e of the heroes
 To ten steeds, ten cloaks,—not silly,
 Ten drinking-horns for quaffing mead,
 Ten beautiful white-skinned hounds.

Entitled is the king of Ui Briuin^f of fame
 To five steeds and five matala,
 Five swords, ten crooked drinking-horns,
 Ten bondmen, ten chess-boards.

Entitled is the king of the Corca^g of the wood
 To five war-horses and five matala,
 Five swords not to be resisted by a bone,
 Five coats of mail against bare javelins.

Entitled is the king of Partraidhe^h of the port
 To three drinking-horns, three swords as his share,
 Three tunics and three steeds
 From the king of Cruachain without any concealment.

^h Partraidhe.—This is still the name of a well-known territory in the county of Mayo. It forms the western portion of the barony of “Carra,” and is now believed to be co-extensive with the parish of Odbha Ceara (Balloyey, also “Partry”), in which there is a range of mountains called Sliabh Partraidhe (Anglicè Slieve Partry); but it would appear from Giolla Iosa Mór Mac Fír bisigh of Leacan, that this territory was originally more extensive.—See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Fíachrach, pp. 17, 152, 187, 189, 202. See also O’Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. xi., where mention is made of three territories of this name, viz.: “Partrigia” of Ceara, which is the one just described; “Partrigia” of the Lake, in which is situated the abbey of Cong, and the Three drinking-horns and three swords

 And three hounds for his forest hunting-shed^k.

To such are the chieftainries entitled
 Of the province of Connacht and Cruachain,
 From the king of Magh Aei of the oxen,
 Such as are entitled to stipend. THE STIPENDS.

The remains of Grianan Ailigh (the palace of Aileach), which was the palace of the kings of the northern Ui Neill (Ne-potes Neilli) is minutely described in the Ordnance Memoir of the parish of Templemore. See also Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 181, note 169: "A prisca scriptoribus Aileach Neid hodie vulgo Ailech appellatur. ⁷ Cuilleantraidhe.—This territory is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1156, but nothing has yet turned up to show its exact situation.

⁸ Tuath Ratha.—(Anglicè, Tooraah) a territory in the north-west of the county of Fermanagh, all included in the present barony of "Magheraboy." After the establishment of surnames, the family of O'Flanagain (O'Flanagans) were the chieftains of this territory, but tributary to Mac Uidhir (Maguire).

^b The men of Lurg.—The inhabitants of the barony of Lurg, in the north of the county of Fermanagh, are still so called. After the establishment of surnames the family of O'Maelduin (O'Muldoons) were the chiefs of this territory, but tributary to head chiefs of Fermanagh.

ⁱ Ui Fiachrach.—These were the people called by the Irish annalists Ui Fiachrach Arda Sratha (of "Ardstraw"). They were seated along the river Dearg, in the north-west of the county of Tyrone, and their district comprised the parish of "Ardstraw," and some adjoining parishes, now belonging to the see of Derry. Ussher states (Primordia, p. 857) that the church of Ardstraw, and many other churches of Opheathrach [O'Fiachrach] were taken from the see of Clogher, and incorporated with that of Derry. This tribe of Ui Fiachrach are to be distinguished from those of Connacht, already mentioned, p. 108, note ^l, suprà; these were of the people called Oirghialla, and descended from Fiachrach, son of Eare, the eldest son of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 76.

bacon, in the Book of Leacan, fol. 165, and muc íarzi, a salted pig, in a Glossary in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, and translated lardum, by O'Colgan, in his version of Brogan's metrical life of St. Bridget, Trias Thaum. p. 516, line 23. It is translated a sheep in Vallancey's Collectanea, vol. iii. p. 514, but that was a mere guess. It will be observed that the prose here differs from the verse, the former having three hundred hogs (zorc), three hundred cows (bó), and three hundred weathers (molz); and the latter three hundred cows (bó), a hundred beeves, and a hundred zinni. The word is sometimes used, like the modern pine, to denote a ring of a chain, as zinne arǵaid, a ring of silver.—Cormac's Glossary, roce Duap; zinne óir, a ring of gold.—Irish Calendar, 17th June. It is quite evident from the text of this poem that zinne is intended to denote some animal; and the bacín of the Book of Leacan, and the lardum of Colgan, prove to a certainty that it means a hog killed and salted.

^k Ui Mic Caerthainn, i. e. the descendants of Forgo, son of Caerthainn, who was son of Eare, grandson of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland. The territory inhabited by this sept was called Tir mic Caerthainn, a name still retained in that of the barony of Tir Chaerthainn, Anglicè "Tirkeerin," in the west of the county of Derry. O'Flaherty, in his Ogygia, part iii. c. 76, very correctly describes this tribe as "near the Bay of Lough Fevail" [Feabhail, Anglicè Foyle], which washes the county of Derry, dividing it from the county of Donegal.

^l The Cianachta, Chein Iochta, i. e. the race of Cian, who was the son of Oilíoll Oluan, king of Munster in the third century. The district is now the barony of "Keenacht." Before the family of O'Caithain (O'Kane) increased in numbers and power, this territory was in the possession of O'Conchobhair of Gleann Geimhin (O'Conor of Glengiven), descended from Fionnchadh Uallach, son of Connla, son of Tadhg, son of Cian; and though so displaced (in the twelfth century) the family was never rooted out, for the “O’Conors” are still numerous in “Glengiven,” which was the ancient name of the vale of the river Roa (Roe), near “Dungiven,” which flows through the very centre of this Cianachta.—See Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i. p. 103. It is curious to observe the great amount of the tribute paid to the king of Aileach by this exotic tribe of the race of Eibhear, from Munster.

^m The people of Li, called Fir Li and Fir Li of the Bann. They were descended from Laeghaire, son of Fiachra Tort, son of Eochaidh, who was son of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland, in the fourth century. See Ogygia, part iii. c. 76. The country possessed by this sept was sometimes called Magh Li, and sometimes translated Leorum fines [Trias Thaum. p. 146], and is described in the Book of Leacan as extending from Bir to Camus. That it was on the west side of the river Bann appears from the Irish Calendar of the O’Clerighs, at 9th January, which places in it the church of Achadh Dubhthaigh (Aghadowey) a parish on the west side of the Bann, in the barony of “Coleraine.” Thus: “Ἐγναίρε δεαῖς ὁ Ἀχὰδ Ὀυβῆταιγι Μοιγίσι φορβρύθanna, i. e. Gnaire Beag from Achadh Dubhthaigh in Magh Li, on the brink of the Banna.” But, on the increasing power of the family of O’Cathain, the Fir Li were driven across the Bann, and were unquestionably on the east side of it at the period of the English invasion. In the translation of the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, Colgan errs egregiously in placing this territory, and the mountain of Sliabh Callainn (Slieve Gallion), on the east side of the Bann; for, though the people were on the east side of the river in Colgan’s, not St. Patrick’s time, the mountain, fortunately, remains in its original position, and still shows that Colgan mistranslated his original.—See Trias Thaum. pp. 146, 48; also the Editor’s translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 58, note ^b, and Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i., article “Dunseverick,” p. 362.

⁶ The Tuathas of Tort, i. e. of the Uí Tuirtre, a people seated on the east side of the Bann and Lough Neagh, in Antrim. These were also the descendants of Fiachra Tort, the grandson of King Colla Uais.—See Ogygia (ubi supra). Uí Tuirtre was given as a name to a deanery in the diocese of “Connor,” in Colgan’s time, and its extent can still be determined. The parishes of “Racavan,” “Ramoan,” and “Donnagorr,” and the churches of “Downkelly” (Drummaul), and “Kilgad” (Connor), and the island of Inis Toide in Loch Beag near Toom Bridge, are mentioned as in it.—See Colgan’s Trias Thaum. p. 183. The subdivisions of Uí Tuirtre continued to be called “Tuoghs” in the reign of James I., and later.—See Pope Nicholas’ Taxation of Down, Connor and Drumore, by the Rev. William Reeves, M. B.

⁸ Dun na h-Uidhre.—There is no place of this name now in the territory of Uí Tuirtre.

⁹ Of Magh.—The prose has Magh Itha, which is correct. It is an extensive plain in the barony of “Raphoe,” Donegal. The church of “Donaghmore,” near the little town of Castlefinn, is mentioned in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick (lib. ii. c. 114), as in this plain. See Colgan, Trias Thaum. p. 144, and p. 181, note 163, where its position is described by Colgan as follows: “Per regionem Magh-ithe, c. 114. Est regione campestris Tir-Conallie ad ripam fluminis Finnei.” According to the bardic accounts of Ireland, this plain derived its name from Ith, the uncle of Milidh of Spain, who was slain there by the Tuatha de Danaan.—See Keating.

^s Craebh.—This territory, which in latter ages belonged to a branch of the family of O'Cathain (O'Kane), who were called Fir na Craeibhe, is situate on the west side of the lower Bann, and its position is defined by the cataract of Eas Craeibhe, i. e. the cataract of Craebh, the daughter of Eoghan mac Dnirtheacht, who lived in Dun Da Bheann, now Mount Sandle, and was drowned in this cataract, now called "the Cutts fishery," near Coleraine. O'Flaherty's Ogygia, p. iii., c. 3. His words are: "Banna inter Leam et Elliam, præter Clanbresail regionem scaturiens per Neachum lacum transiens Ændromensem agrum et Fireriviam (ḡḡ na cpaibhe) Scriniamque in Londinodorinsi agro intersecat, et tertio a Culraniâ et Cataractâ Eascribe lapide se in Oceanum transfundit totius Europe longè fecundissimus." This was exactly the position of the Fir Li in the time of St. Patrick; and it is now difficult to determine where the Fir na Craeibhe were seated at the time this poem was composed. According to tradition in the country the sept called Fir na Craeibhe, which is not incorrectly interpreted "men of the branch," were seated at "Binbradagh, near Dungiven;" this could not have been the case till they dispossessed the more ancient owners of Gleann Geimhin, as above mentioned. See Annals of the Four Masters, at the years 1118, 1192, 1205.

 Who does not maintain his right. THE RIGHT.

THESE ARE the payments and stipends of the king of Aileach to his chieftainries and tribes, for refection and escort.

The king of Aileach himself, then, when he is not king of Eire, is entitled to sit by the side of the king of Eire at banquet and at fair, and to go before the king of Eire at treaties and assemblies and councils and supplications.

And he is entitled to receive from the king of Eire fifty swords and fifty shields and fifty bondmen and fifty dresses and fifty steeds: these for the king of Aileach. He distributes his stipends thus:

Five shields, five swords and five drinking-horns and five women and five bondmen and five steeds to the king of Cairbre Droma Cliabh.

Five shields, five bondmen, five women, five swords to the king of the Cineal Aedha of Eas Ruaidh.

Six steeds, six shields six swords, six drinking-horns, six blue cloaks and six green cloaks to the king of the Cineal Boghaine.

Five steeds, five shields, five swords and five cloaks, five coats of mail to the king of the Cineal Eanna.

Seven women, seven bondmen, seven steeds, seven swords to the king of the Cineal Lughdhach.

Seven bondmen, seven women, seven swords, seven drinking-horns to the king of Inis Eoghain.

Six steeds, six drinking-horns, six swords, six shields, six hounds to the king of Magh Iotha.

^u Cairbre of Druim Cliabh.—This district is now the barony of "Carbury" in the north of the county of Sligo. It is called of Druim Cliabh (Drumcliff), from a famous monastery erected there in the sixth century by St. Colum Cille. The ancient inhabitants of this territory were descended from Cairbre, the third son of Niall of the Nine Hostages. It is curious to observe, that it was considered a part of Ulster, and tributary to the king of Aileach, when this poem was written.—See Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 110, Trias Thaum. p. 144, and Genealogies, Tribes, &c. of the Ui Fiachrach, p. 278.

^v Cineal Aedha, i. e. the race of Aedh, commonly Anglicized "Hugh." This sept

of the race of Conall Gulban was seated in the territory of Tir Aedha, the now barony of "Tirhugh," in the south-west of the county of Donegal. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, O'h-Aedha (now Anglicè "Hughes") was the chief of this territory, which was called the Triocha or Cantred of Eas Ruaidh, from the great cataract of that name.—See p. 34, note 9, suprà, and Battle of Magh Rath, p. 157, note ^u.

^w Cineal Boghaine, i. e. the race of Eanna Boghaine, who was the second son of Conall Gulban, the progenitor of all the Cineal Conaill. Their country was called Tir Boghaine, and is included in the present barony of "Banagh," in the west of the county of Donegal. This territory is described in the Book of Feanach (Fenagh), fol. 47, a, a, as extending from the river Eidlíneach (Eany), which falls into the harbour of Inbhear Naíle (Inver—the bay of Donegal), to the stream of Dobhar, which flows from the rugged mountains.—See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 156, note p. The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 40, places the mountain of Sliabh Liag in this territory.—See Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 135.

^x Cineal Eanna, i. e. the race of Eanna, the youngest son of Niall of the Nine Hostages. The position of the territory of this tribe is described by Colgan as follows, in a note on the Life of "St. Baithenus:" "Est in Tir Conallia inter duo maris Brachia, nempe inter sinum Loch-Febhuil et sinum de Suíleach et ab hoc Enna possessam fuisse et nomen sumpsisse tradunt acta Conalli fratris eiusdem Ennae, et aliae passim domesticæ hystoriæ."—Acta SS. p. 370, note 14. The parish of "Taugh-boyne," Ἐαὐὸ Ὀαεῖν (i. e. the house of "St. Baithenus"), in the barony of "Raphoe," is in this territory, as appears from Colgan, loc. cit. It is stated in the will of Domhnall O'Galchobhair (Donnell O'Gallagher), steward to the celebrated Aedh Ruadh O'Domhnaill (Red Hugh O'Donnell), who died in 1602, that this territory contained thirty quarters of land. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, "Mag Dubhain" was the chief of this territory.

^k Battle of Achadh Leith-dheirg.—This battle was fought A. D. 332. The place is mentioned by Tighearnaeh as situate in that part of the country of the Oirghialla called Fearn-mhagh, the now barony of "Farney," in the county of Monaghan. The Editor, when he visited the county of Down several years since, thought that it might be "Aghaderg near Loughbrickland," but he has been long since convinced that this is an error, inasmuch as Fearn-mhagh is unquestionably the present barony of Farney, in the county of Monaghan, and the parish of "Aghderg." Aé uearġ, i. e. the red ford, is in the country into which the ancient Ultonians were driven, and of which they retained possession. The battle was fought many miles to the west of Gleann Righe, which is the vale of the Newry river, beyond which the Ultonians were driven; and it is remarked in the accounts of the battle of Achadh Leith-dheirg, that they never extended their kingdom beyond it, for that a

The third part of what he is entitled to get from the king of Eire the race of Colla Meann are entitled to receive from him on account of his having been a mighty man. The same portion which the king of the Oirghialla receives from the king of Eire, his queen is entitled to receive from the queen of the king of Eire. Of these Benean composed this [poem]:

His queen is entitled to the same privilege. And for them did Benean sing this work below:

⁸ A hosting of three fortnights.—This differs but little from the service of a knight's fee in the feudal system, by which the knight was bound to attend the king in his wars for forty days every year.—Coke upon Littleton, ss. 75, 76, and Blackstone's Commentaries, book i. c. 13. See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 67, where it is stated that if the king of Connacht should continue longer than six weeks on an expedition, the forces which he had levied in Ui Maine (who were, as is there shown, an offset of the Oirghialla) might return home.

¹ Nor during the Autumn.—See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 67, where it is stated that the tribes of that territory were freed from the hostings of Spring and Autumn, and that there was no power to ask them against their will. This is a very curious privilege, ceded or continued to a race after they had left their original province.

¹⁰ Seven hundred, i. e. should the Oirghialla send seven hundred men to assist the monarch on an expedition, he should pay each of them a scad or cow. The term peð, or peod, is used throughout the

The great compact of the Oirghialla
I recite [made] with the king of Eire.

There is due of the Oirghialla
By statutes of regulation
A hosting for three fortnights^k
Every three years.

Not in Spring they ever go,
This is what I have heard,
Nor at the beginning of Autumn^l
On the eve of reaping.

Seven hundred is their rising-out
On going forth from their territories,
Seven hundred^m [are given] to them, in return,
Of cows for the hosting;

A hosting across Oirghialla
Without respite for the debt,
Seven cumhalsⁿ to them are to be given
For it on the morrow.

If they should kill cattle,—
In poems it is mentioned,—

Brehon Laws to denote a full-grown cow.

It is stated in the tract already cited, p. 36, n. e, that the king of the Oirghialla was bound to go with his rising-out on an expedition with the monarch for six weeks every third year (but not in Spring or Autumn), and that each of their chieftains was paid twenty-one cows as wages, during that time.

ⁿ Seven cumhals.—A cumhal was a bondmaid, and her value was equal to that of three cows. Ware quotes an old Irish canon, which says: "Whoever shall presume to steal or plunder anything that belongs to the king or a bishop, or shall commit any outrage against them, or shall offer any contempt to them, he shall pay the price of seven bondwomen, or shall do penance with the bishop for seven years. See his work on the Antiquities of Ireland, c. xx. It is stated in the tract on Oirghialla just referred to, that if their country should be plundered while the forces of Oirghialla were away on an expedition with the monarch, the latter should give them six cows for every cow which had been carried away by the plunderers.

¹² Without a fetter or chain, i. e. when the hostage takes an oath, that is, as the prose has it, swears by the hand of the king, that he will not escape from his captivity, he is left without a fetter; but if he should afterwards escape, he then loses his caste, and is regarded as a perjured man. The tract on Oirghialla states, that whenever the hostage of the Oirghialla was fettered, golden chains were used for the purpose, and that it was hence they were called Oirghialla, i. e. of the golden hostages.

¹³ To the third of each profit. — See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, pp. 63, 64, 65, where it is stated that the king of Connacht ceded the following emoluments to the people of that territory, who were a colony from the eastern or original Oirghialla, planted in Connacht after the establishment of Christianity, viz., the third part of every treasure found hidden or buried in the depths of the earth, and the third part of the eric for every man of their people that is killed, and the third part of every treasure thrown by the sea into the harbours of Connacht. There is a resemblance here to the Gallo-Norman feudal privileges of treasure-trove, jetsom, &c.

^r*Colla Meann*.—The race of Colla Meann were the inhabitants of CricheMughdhorn, “Cremorne,” in Monaghan, and not the mountainous country of “Mourne,” in the east of Ulster, as stated in O’Flaherty’s Ogygia, part iii. c. 76. The mountainous territory in the east of Ulster belonged to the ancient Uilta, not to the Oirghialla. From Colla Uais, the eldest of the brothers, the “Mac Donnells, Mac Dugalds, and Mac Allisters” of Scotland, with their

of the king of Ireland, and all the rest were the length of his hand and sword distant from the king. See the Banquet of Dun na n-Géadh, Battle of Magh Rath, p. 29. St. Bernard, in the Life of St. Malachy, says that the Oirghialla would not allow any bishop among them except one of their own family, and that they had carried this through fifteen generations; and he adds immediately after, that they had claimed the see of Ard Macha, and maintained possession of it for two hundred years, claiming it as their indubitable birth-right. See Colgan's Trias Thaum. pp. 801, 802.

 Secret confidence, elegant apartments
 For the comely hostages of the Oirghialla.

ter ages this territory was more usually called Clann Breasail (Anglicè Clanbrazil). According to O'Dubhagain's Topographical Poem, the tribe of O'Gairbheth (O'Garveys) were the ancient chiefs of this territory, but in more modern times it belonged to the "Mac Canns," who are not of the Ui Niallain race, but descend from Rochadh, son of Colla Da Chrioch. This territory is shown on a map of Ulster made in the reign of Elizabeth (or James I.), as on the south of "Lough Neagh," where the upper Bann enters that lake, from which, and from the space given it, it appears to be co-extensive with the present barony of "Oneiland East." This view shows that in the formation of the baronies more than one territory was placed in that of "Oneiland;" and the fact is that all the eastern part of Oirghialla, called Oirthear, was occupied by septs of the race of Niallan, that district including the present baronies of East and West "Oneiland" and also those of East and West "Orior;" for the sept of O'h-Anluain (O'Hanlons), who possessed the two latter baronies, were descended from the aforesaid Niallan.

² Ui Eachach, i. e. the descendants of Eochaidh, son of Feidhlim, son of Fiachra Casan, son of Colla Da Chrioch. This tribe is to be distinguished from the Ui Eachach Uladh, or ancient inhabitants of the baronies of "Iveagh," in the county of Down, who were of the Clanna Rudhraidhe. They were a tribe of the Oirghialla, descended from Eochaidh, son of Cairbre Damh-airgid, chief of the Oirghialla in the time of Saint Patrick. This sept were seated in the district of Tuath Eachadha, i. e. Eochaidh's district, a territory comprised in the present barony of "Armagh." This district is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1498, and it is shown on the old Map of Ulster, already referred to, as "Toaghie," and represented as the country of "Owen mac Hugh mac Neale mac Art O'Neale."

³ Ui Meith, i. e. the descendants of Muireadhach Meith, the son of Iomchadh, who was the son of Colla Da Chrioch. There were two territories of this name in Oirghialla, one called sometimes Ui Meith Tire, from its inland situation, and sometimes Ui Meith Macha, from its contiguity to Armagh; and the latter Ui Meith Mara, from its contiguity to the sea. The latter was more anciently called Cuailghne, and its name and position are preserved in the Angliceized name of "O'Meath," a district in the county of Louth, comprising ten

Entitled is the king of Ui Eachach^z, the noble,
To five purple cloaks of four points,
Five shields, five swords, five drinking-horns,
Five grey, dark-forked steeds.

Entitled is the king of Ui Meith^a, the hero,
From the king of Macha (of Oirghialla) of great meetings

townlands, situate between Carlingford and Newry. The former, which is evidently the country of the Ui Meith referred to in Leabhar na g-Ceart, is a territory in the present county of Monaghan, comprising the parishes of "Tullycorbet, Kilmore, and Tehallan," in the barony of Monaghan. Colgan has the following note in editing the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. iii. c. 9:

"Regio dicta Hua-Meith hodiè O'Meith est in Orientali parte Ultoniæ, hinc Airthear, id est Orientalis dicta, et pars ejus mari vicinior Hua-Meith-mara, .i. Hua Methia maritima, et pars a mari remotior comparatione prioris Hua-Meith-tire, .i. Hua Methia terræ sive continentis quia continenti Ultoniæ jacet: hic et ab aliis præcis scriptoribus vocatur. Nomen illud Hua-Meith .i. posterorum Meith, videtur sortita a posteris Muredachi cognomento Meith, id est Obesi, filii Imchadli filii Colla-da-Chrioch; de quo Sanctilogium Genealogicum, c. 13, latè in eo tractu tempore Patricii et postea dominantibus: Trias Thuam. p. 184, n. 16.

From this note O'Flaherty, and from both Harris, in his edition of Ware's Antiquities, have concluded that "Hy-Meith-tire" was the barony of Orrior (O'Hanlon's country) in the county of Armagh; but incorrectly, for we have irrefragable evidence to prove that Ui Meith Tire was much further to the west. 1. The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick places the church of Tegh-Thellain, i. e. Teach Theallain, Anglicè "Tehallan," in the barony of Monaghan, in regione de Hua-Meith-tire, a territory adjoining to regio Mugdornorum, which is the Latinized form of Criche Mughdhorna, "Cremorne," in Monaghan, in which the Tripartite Life places the church of Domhnach Maighean (Donaghmoyné). 2. We learn from the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 26th January, that Tulach Carboid (Tullycorbet, in the said parish of Tehallan), was in-Uib Meire Maíca, i. e. in Ui Meith Macha. 3. It appears from the same Calendar, that Cill Mor, the church of St. Aedhan mac Aenghusa, is in the territory of Ui Meith, and this is unquestionably the church of "Kilmore," near the town of Monaghan. 4. Colgan, Acta SS. p. 713, places the church of Mucnamh (Mucknoe), at Castleblayney, in this territory. Hence the conclusion is inevitable, that the territory of the Ui Meith-Tire, Ui Meith Macha, was in the present county of Monaghan, and not in that of Armagh. We have, moreover, the authority of the Tripertite Life of St. Patrick, to show that it met the barony of Cremorne at a place called Omna Remme, where their ancestor Muireadhach was interred. "Sepultus autem est [Muredachus] in confinibus Ilua Methiorum et Mugdornorum in loco Omna Remme nuncupato, qui licet sit in limitibus utriusque regionis ad jus tamen Mugdornorum spectat."—Vita Tripart. lib. iii., c. 11. Trias Thaum. p. 151.

All our modern writers, even to the present, have been led astray by the assumption that the Cricch Mughdhorna of the ancient writers is the present mountainous barony of "Mourne;" but as that territory is on the east side of the boundary at Gleann Ríghé, it could not have been a part of "Oriel," and consequently not the country of the descendants of Mughdhorn Dubh, the son of Colla, which lay far west of Gleann Ríghé. It appears from a pedigree of the "Mac Mahons," in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, that the mountainous district of Mourne in Uladh (which originally bore the appropriate appellation of Beanna Boirche, see p. 38, note 8, suprà), was so called from a tribe of the inhabitants of Cricch Mughdhorn in Oirghialla, who emigrated thither in the reign of Niall the Haughty, the son of Aedh, who was son of Maghnus Mac Mathghamhna. See the Annals of the Four Masters at the year 1457, where a range of heights in "Cremorne" is called Sliabh Mughdhorn, i. e. mons Mugdornorum. According to O'Dubhagain the tribes of O' h-Innreachtaigh (O'Hanrattys) were the ancient chiefs of Ui Meith Macha, and this is confirmed by the tradition in the country which remembers that they were the ancient chieftains of this part of the county of Monaghan before they were dispossessed by the sept of Mac Mathghamhna (Mac Mahons). It also adds that Maeldoid, the patron saint of Mucnamh (Mucknoe, at Castle Blayney), was of the same stock as the Ui Innreachtaigh (O'Hanrattys); the ancient dynasts of the district. This curious tradition is fully borne out by the following note in Colgan's Trias Thaum., p. 181, on Four cloaks, four iron-grey steeds.

^b Ui Dortain.—These were otherwise called Ui Tortain, i. e. the descendants of Dortan or Tortan, son of Fiach, son of Feidhlim, son of Fiachra, who was son of Colla Da Chrioch. This was in that part of Oirghialla included in the present county of Meath, in which the celebrated old tree called Bile Tortan, which stood near "Ardbraccan", was situate. See O'Fla. Ogygia. part iii. c. 60; Book of Baile an Mhuta, fol. 229, b.; Colgan, Trias Thaum. p. 129, c. ii.; and p. 184, n. 23, 24; and Feilire Aenghuis, 8 July.

^c Ui Briuin Archoill, i. e. the descendants of Brian of Archoill, who was the son of Muireadhaech Meith, the progenitor of the Ui Meith. See Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh's genealogical work, p. 309.—Colgan thinks that this was the district in Tyrone called Muintir Birn in his own time, which is a district shown on the old map of Ulster, already referred to, as a district in the south of the barony of "Dungannon," adjoining the territory of "Trough," in the county of Monaghan, and "Toaghie," now the barony of Arnmagh. See Trias Thaum., p. 184, n. 2. In St. Patrick's time the Oirghialla had possession of the present county of Tyrone, but they were gradually displaced by families of the race of Eoghan, the son of Niall of the Nine Hostages.

It is shown on the old map of Ulster, already often referred to, as “the countrie of Cormac Mac Barone” [O’Neill]. The River Blackwater is represented as running through it, and the fort of Augher and the village of Ballygawley as in it; the town of Clogher on its western, and the church of Errigal Keroge on its northern boundary. O’Caemhain was the chief of this territory according to O’Dubhagain.

Colgan informs us that the territory of the race of Creamhthann was known in his own time, and considered as included in the barony of “Slane,” [in Meath].

The tribe who inhabited it were descended from Lughaidh, son of Creamh-thann, son of Rochadh, who was the son of Colla Da Chrioch. See Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh's genealogical work, page 309.

ⁱ Dartraidhe, i. e. of Dartraidhe Coiminsi, as the prose has it, now the barony of "Dartry" in the south-west of the county of Monaghan, adjoining Fernnagh. According to O'Dubhagain, the sept of O'Bacigheallain (O'Boylans) were the chiefs of this territory.

^k Fearn-mhagh, i. e. the plain of the alders, "Farney," a celebrated barony in the south of the county of Monaghan, for a very copious and interesting account of which the reader is referred to Mr. Shirley's work entitled "Some Account of the Territory or Dominion of Farney, p. 1, where the author shows that the alder is the prevailing native plant of this barony. The battle of Carn Achaidh Leith-dheirg, in which the Three Collas defeated the Clanna Rudhraidhe, was fought in this territory. See p. 136, n. k, suprà.

III. 3.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF ULADH.

OF THE WAGES and of the stipends of Uladh here.

In the first place the king of Uladh, when he himself is not king of Eire, is entitled to be by the side of the king of Eire, and he is to hold the first place in his confidence and society while he is along with the king of Eire. And when he is departing he obtains fifty swords and fifty steeds and fifty cloaks and fifty cowls and fifty scings and fifty coats of mail and thirty rings and ten greyhounds and ten matals and ten drinking-horns and ten ships and twenty handfuls of lecks and twenty sea-gulls' eggs. All these are given to the king of Uladh every third year from the king of Eire.

Twenty drinking-horns and twenty swords and twenty greyhounds and twenty bondmen and twenty steeds and twenty cloaks and twenty matals and twenty cumhals from the king of Uladh to the king of Dal Araidhe.

Three steeds, three bondmen, three women, three ships to the king of Dal Riada.

the church of Eanach Conglais (Killany, in the barony of Farney), was in it. See Trias Thaum., p. 184, n. 21. It is also highly probable, if not absolutely certain, that the parish of Machaire Rois (Magh-cross), and that the town of Carraig Machaire Rois (Carrickmacross) were comprised in it.

poem; but it must be observed that the Clann Colla intruded further upon their kingdom in a few centuries after. Colgan has the following note on this subject on the 31st chapter of Joceline's Life of St. Patrick, Trias Thaum. p. 109: "Tota provincia quæ hodiè Ultonia appellatur, prisicis temporibus sermone patrio nunc Ulta nunc

¹⁶ Dal Riada, i. e. the tribe of Cairbre Riada, the son of Conaire II. monarch of Ireland, A. D. 212. Another branch of this tribe settled amongst the Picts, a fact mentioned by Bede.—Hist. Ecclesiast. lib. i. c. 1. Bede explains Dal in this compound as signifying part in the Scotie language, and the same explanation is given in Cormac's Glossary; but O'Flaherty says that it signifies with greater propriety an offspring (Ogygia, part iii. c. 63); and Charles O'Connor of Belanagare, in his edition of Ogygia Vindicated, p. 175, observes that "Dal properly signifies posterity or descent by blood," but that "in an enlarged and figurative sense it signifies a district, i. e. the division or part allotted to such posterity;" and he adds: "Of this double sense we have numberless instances; thus Bede's interpretation is doubtless, in the second sense, admissible."

Colgan, in his Annotations on the Life of St. Olean, at 20th February, has the following curious note on Dalredia, to which all modern writers, except Ussher, are indebted for what they have told us concerning this territory:

"Hæc regio nomen sortita est a perantiquâ et nobilissimâ familiâ Dalrieda dictâ, quæ nomen hoc suum quòd a progenitore accepit, regioni quam possedit impertiit. Ea enim familia oriunda est ex quodam principe Hiberno, cui nomen Carbreus et cognomen Rifhoda secundum vocis etymon; secundum verò modum pronuntiandi Rioda, et nunc secundum vsum vulgarem et modum etiam scribendi Rioda, vel Rieda. Vnde huius progenies, Dal riêda, id est, stirps, seu propago Riedæ Hibernicè appellatur: Latinè verò, ut Venerabili Bedæ placet, Dal Reudini; sed rectiùs Dalriedini appellantur. Fuit autem hæc progenies celebris et potens multis sæculis, non solum in prædictâ regione Hiberniæ, verùm etiam in Albaniâ, quam hodiè communiter Scotiam vocamus. Hiberni enim prædicti regionis principe Rieda, seu vt Beda loquitur, Reuda duce, inuaserunt priùs insulas Hebridum et aliquas viciniore continentis Albaniæ regiones, quas aliquamdiu possiderunt, vt lib. i. hyst. cap. 1. docet Beda his verbis: 'Procedente autem tempore Britannia post Britones et Pictos tertiam Sco-

According to a letter written by Randal, Earl of Antrim, to Archbishop Ussher, the Irish Dalriada extended thirty miles from the River Buais (Bush) to the cross of Gleann Finneachta, now the village of Glynn, in the east of the county of Antrim. See Ussher's Primordia, p. 1029; and Dublin Penny Journal, vol. i. p. 362.

How long the posterity of Cairbre Riada remained powerful in this territory, or what family names they assumed after the establishment of surnames in the tenth century, we have no documents to prove, but it seems highly probable that they were driven out at an early period by the Clann Colla, for we find the Ui Tuirtre and Fir Li, of whom O'Fhloinn (O'Lyn), a descendant of Colla Uais, was king, were in possession of all the territory of Dal Riada in 1177. The Fir Li, as has been already stated, were on the west side of the River Bann in the time of St. Patrick, but they were certainly on the east side of it when Sir John de Courcy invaded Ulster. However, we have no document to prove the exact period at which they established themselves in the country of the Dal Riada.

The name Dal Riada (or Renda) is still preserved in the corrupted form of "Ruta," Anglicè "Route," and "Route," a well-known district in the north of the county Antrim. See Ussher's Primordia, p. 611.

* Oirthear, i. e. eastern. This is to be distinguished from Crioch na n-Oirthear in Oirghialla (see p. 148, n. y), but its exact situation has not yet been determined.

Annals of the Four Masters, first at the year 1199, and next at the year 1391, where it is mentioned that Mac Giolla Muire (Gillimurry), who was otherwise called Cu Uladh O'Morna, was chief of the Ui Earca Chein and Leath Chathail, from which it would appear that the two territories were conterraneous, which could not be the case if the former were in the barony of Antrim. Rymer mentions a "Mac Gilmore dux de Auderkin," 3 Edw. I. 1275. At a later period the "Gilmers" were settled in Holywood. See Stuart's Armagh. The name occurs in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, part ii. c. 133, where it is stated that the Irish apostle erected there a church which was called Rath Easpuig Innic, from a Bishop Vinnocus, whom he placed over it. Trias Thaum, p. 147. According to the pedigree of this tribe, given by Dubhaltach Mac Firisigh, in his genealogical work (Lord Rothen's copy), p. 205, the Ui Earca Chein are a Connacht tribe descended from Crutine, son of Éoghan Sriabh, who was son of Duach Galach, king of Connacht, in the fifth century; but no account has been discovered of how or when they settled in Dal Araidhe. The descent of Cionaeth (Keuny) O'Morna, of this race, chief of Leath Chathail (Lecale) is thus given by Mac Firisigh (ubi supra):

"Cinaeth, son of Ruarcán, son of Mael-sneachta, a quo O'Morna, in Leth Chathail, is called, son of Fearchar, son of Oisen, son of Onchu, son of Broc, son of Aine, son of Sinell, son of Amergin, son of Cruithne, son of Éoghan Sriabh, son of Dnach Galach."

It would appear from the same work, p. 508, that there was a more ancient line of Chiefs in Leath Chathail than the O'Mornas, and that this older line was of the ancient Ullta, or Clanna Rudhraidhe, and descended from Cathal, from whom Leath Chathail was named, the son of Muireadhach, son of Aenghus, son of Maelcobha, son of Fiachna, son of Deaman, king of Ulidia, or circumscribed Uladh, slain in the battle of Ardeoran in Dal Riada, A. D. 627. From the various references to this family of Mac Giolla Muire, alias O'Morna, occurring in the Irish Annals, and other documents, it is quite evident that they originally possessed the barony of "Lecale," a part of "Kinlarty," and the barony of "Upper Castlereagh," in the county of Down; but after the English invasion their territory was very much circumscribed by the encroachments of the families of the Whites and Savages, and afterwards of the O'Neills of Clann Aedha Buidhe (Clannaboy), and Mac Artains. It would appear, however, from the Anglo-Irish Annals, that the "Mac Gilmories," or "Gilmors," were very stout opposers of the English in their original territory in the beginning of the fifteenth century. The two notices of this family following, which occur in Ware's Annals of Ireland, are sufficient to prove this fact :

"Anno 1407. A certain false fellow, an Irish man named Mac Adam Mac Gilmor, that had caused forty churches to be destroyed, who was never baptized, and therefore he was called Corbi [κοιρβει, wicked], took Patrick Savadge prisoner, and received for his ransom two thousand marks, and afterwards slew him together with his brother Richard."

It is difficult to say where the good and honest Ware got this passage, but it is quite evident that Coirbi does not mean unbaptized, and that Savadge had not so much money as 2000 marks in the world.

"Anno 1408. This year Hugh Mac Gil- more was slain in Carrickfergus, within the church of the Fryars Minors, which church he had before destroyed, and broke down the glass windows to have the iron bars through which his enemies, the Savages, had entered upon him."—Edition of 1705.

The O'Neill pedigree quoted by Dr. Stuart, in his History of Armagh, p. 630, states that the "Clannaboy" O'Neills gave to the Gilmors the lands of Holywood. The parish of Dundonald would also appear to have belonged to this tribe.

This tribe possessed the present barony of "Upper Massareene," with the parishes of "Kilwarlin and Drumbo," on the other side of the River Lagan. The exact number of churches and chapels in the territory is given in Pope Nicholas's Taxation. See Taxation of the Diocese of Down and Connor and Dro-more, about the year 1291. Edited by the Rev. Wm. Reeves, M. B., 1847. Hodges and Smith.

In 1333 Blathweyc, Blawick, Blavico, were names for the then Comitatus Novæ Villæ, extending all round "Newtown-Ards," including "Bangor." Inq. post mort. Com. Ult., 1333. See also *Calend. Canc. This Comitatus Novæ Villæ de Blathweyc evidently comprised the northern portion of the barony of "Ards," and the greater part of the barony of "Lower Castlereagh," in the county of Down.

of Down. The tribe of Mac Artain were chiefs of this and the adjoining barony of Cineal Fhaghartaigh, "Kinelarty." They descend from Caelbhadh, the brother of Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of the family of the Mac Aenghusa (Magennis).

According to the bardic accounts, this inlet of the sea forced its way through the land in the time of Partholan, who came to Ireland 312 years after the flood according to O'Flaherty's Chronology. See Ogygia, part iii. cc. 2 and 3.

principally between Loch Cuan and the sea. The name of this territory is translated Altitudo Ultorum, in the Life of St. Comhghall, founder of Beannchor (Bangor), which is situate in this territory.

^f Leath Chathail, i. e. Cathal's half, or portion, Anglicè "Lecale," a well-known barony in the county of Down, anciently called Maigh Inis, i. e. the insular plain. The name Leath Chathail was derived from Cathal the son of Muireadhach, son of Aenghus, son of Maelcobha, son of Fiachna, who was the son of Deaman, king of Ulidia, slain in the year 627. See p. 163, note ^c, suprà.

^g Boirche.—See p. 38, note ^g, as to the mountains usually called Beanna Boirche,

i. e. the peaks of Boirche, called (according to the Dinnseanchus) after Boirche, the shepherd of Ros, king of Ulster in the third century, who herded the king's cattle on these mountains. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 69. In the Dinnseanchus it is stated that the shepherd Boirche could view from these mountains all the lands southwards as far as Dun Dealgan (Dundalk), and northwards as far as Dun Sobhairce. This is another proof that the present barony of "Mourne" was not the Crioch Mughdhorra of the Oirghíalla.

^h Cobha.—This territory is more usually called Magh Cobha, i. e. the plain of Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of the tribe called Uí Eathach Cobha, who were seated in the present baronies of "Upper and Lower Iveagh" in the county of Down. See O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 78. The Four Masters, and from them Colgan and others, have erred in placing this plain in Tyrone; and Dr. Lanigan has been set astray by them in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland (vol. iv. p. 11, note 26), where he conjectures that Magh Cobha was probably the name of the plain around the present village of "Coagh" in the county of Tyrone. But the situation of the plain of Magh Cobha is fixed by the older writers, who place it in Ui (Uibh) Eathach (Iveagh), and place in it the monastery of Druim Mor (Dromore) and the church of Domhnach Mor Muighe Cobha, which is unquestionably the present "Donaghmore" (in "Upper Iveagh"), nearly midway between Newry, and Lough Brickland. See the Feilire Aenghuis at 16th of November, and Haliday's edition of the first part of Keating's History of Ireland, p. 318, where the plain of Magh Cobha, which is said to have been cleared of wood in the reign of Irial Faidh, is placed in "Aoibh Eachach," which Haliday Anglicizes "Iveagh." See also the Annals of Tighearnach at the years 735 and 7^o9, and Acta Sanctorum, apud Bolland. 7 Junii. The family of Mac Aenghusa (Magennises) were chiefs of this territory for many centuries before the confiscation of Ulster; but (according to O'Dubhagain) O'Gairbhith, and O h-Ainbhith (Anglicè O'Garvey, and O'Hanvey or O'Hannafey), preceded them. "Magennis" descends from Saran, chief of Dal Araidhe in St. Patrick's time, and this Saran was the eleventh in the descent from Fiacha Araidhe, and the fourth from Eochaidh Cobha, the ancestor of all the Ui Eathach Cobha.

ⁱ Muirtheimhne.—See page 21, note *. This territory is more usually called Magh Muirtheimhne and Conaille Muirtheimhne, from the descendants of Conall Cearnach (of the Clanna Rudhraidhe race), the most distinguished of the heroes of the Red Branch in Ulster, who flourished here for many centuries. Colgan describes its situation as follows, in his notes on the Scholiast of Fiach's Hymn on the Life of St. Patrick :

"In Conallia Murthemneusi. Est campestris Regio Australis Ultoniæ a monte Bregh prope Pontanam ciuitatem [Drogheda] vsque in sinum maris Dun-Delganæ, seu vt vulgus loquitur, Dun-dalchix vicinum; iuxta quod est campus ille in patriis historiis celebrati nominis vulgò Mag-murthemne dictus; a quo et illa Regio Murthemnensis vocatur quæ hodiè Comitatus Luthæ vulgò vocatur."—Triás Thaum. p. 8, note 16. It appears from the lives of St. Brigid (Bridget) and St. Monenna, and from the Feilire Aenghuis and other calendars, that the churches of Fochard, Iniscaein, Cill Umche, and Druim Ineaschuinn, were in this territory. Ussher informs us that the district of Campus Murthemene (in quo Conalcorum gens maximè

Ten cloaks with their borders of gold.

Entitled is the king of Muirtheimhne¹, the hero, viget) was called Maghery-Conall in his time. See his Primordia, pp. 705, 706, and O'Fla. Ogygia, part iii. c. 47.

This territory had been wrested from the descendants of Conall Cearnach several centuries before the English invasion, by the Oirghialla, so that the present county of Louth, instead of being regarded as a part of Uladh or Ulidia, as it certainly was when this poem was written, has been considered as the Machaire or plain of the Oirghialla, and the part oftenest called "Oriël" or "Uriël," by English writers.

From the territories here enumerated as in Uladh (i. e. in Ulidia, or the circumscribed territory of the ancient Ullta), it is quite evident that it comprised, when this poem was written, the present counties of Louth, Down, and Antrim, except a portion of the last, which was in the possession of the Ui Tuirtre, who were a family of the Oirghialla, as already mentioned; and it looks very strange that it should not have been tributary to the king of Uladh, being on the east side of Loch n-Eathach (Lough Neagh), in the heart of his country, and separating his subjects of Dal Araidhe from those of Dal Riada, to whom he gave stipends, and from whom he received tribute.

The dominant family in this territory when it was invaded by Sir John De Courcy in 1177, was of the Dal Fiatach race. He was Cu Uladh, i. e. Canis Ultoniæ, Mac Duimshleibhe (Dunlevy) O h Eochadha, called by Giraldus Cambrensis, Dunlevus, to whose warlike character he bears the following testimony in his Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. xvi.:

"Videns autem Dunlevus se verbis minimè profecturum corrogatis vndique viribus cum 10 bellatorum millibus infra 8 dies hostes in vrbe viriliter inuadit. In hæc enim insulâ sicut et in omni natione, gens borealis magis bellica semper et truculenta reperitur."

But the greater number of his sub-chiefs were of the Clanna Rudhraidhe. Thus we see that the ancient limits of the Clanna Rudhraidhe and Dal Fiatach of Ulster were greatly restricted at the period of the English invasion by the upspringing vigor and increasing population of the race of the Collas, and the more powerful race of Niall of the Nine Hostages. Dubhaltach Mac Firsigh, in his pedigrees of the Irish families says, that the Dal Fiatachs, who were the old kings of Ulster, and blended of old with the Clanna Rudhraidhe, were hemmed into a narrow corner of the province by the race of Conn of the Hundred Battles, i. e. the Oirghialla and Ui Neill of the north, and that even this narrow corner was not left to them [he alludes to the obtrusion of the O'Neills of Clanna Aedha Buidhe (Clanaboy), who subdued almost the entire of Ulidia], so that they had nearly been extinguished, except a few who had left the original territory. And, he says, grieving, "this is the case with all

" Magh Line.—This name (which is Anglicized "Moylinny") is that of a level territory, lying principally in the barony of "Upper Antrim," in the county of Antrim. According to an Inquisition taken 7 Jac. i., the territory was bounded on the south and south-east by the river Six-mile-water, on the north and north-west for two miles by the stream of Glancurry (now ḡleann a' cōipe, Anglicè Glenwherry), as far as the mountain of Carnally; its boundary then extended southwards to Connor, and thence in a southern direction to Edenduffcarrick (now called Shane's

son. See the Ordnance Map of the County of Down, sheet 9. We have seen above in the note on Uí Dearca Chein, p. 161, n. 5, that Mac Giolla Muire was chief of that tribe, and it appears from the Registry of John Prene, who was Archbishop of Armagh, from 1439 to 1443, that "Patricius Pallidus O'Gilmore" was chief parishioner of "Bredae" in 1442.

And a hundred hogs in their droves,
As I do relate.

And a hundred beeves,
And a hundred hogs to him are given
With a hundred cloaks.

Thrice fifty beeves from the Mancha^u,

Thrice fifty fair cloaks with borders
Not crooked.

Three hundred oxen from Dubhthrian^v
Are due,
And three hundred cows with their distended udders
To the king.

or Monaigh Uladh. They were a Leinster tribe, descended from Monach, son of Oilíoll Mor, son of Braacan, son of Fiac, son of Daire Barrach, son of Cathaer Mor, monarch of Ireland. They had slain their relative Fanna, the son of the king of Leinster, and fled to Eochaidh Gundat, king of Uladh, their mother's relative, and under the protection of St. Tighearn-mach of Cluain-Eois (Clones). Another branch of the same tribe settled at Loch Éirne, and gave name to Fir Manach (Fer-mannagh), a territory which they possessed anterior to the Ui h-Eignigh and Meg Uidhir. See Dubh. Mac Fírbisigh's genealogical work, p. 466. The exact situation of this tribe has not been determined, but they were somewhere in the barony of Iveagh, in the county of Down. They existed down to so late a period as 1173, when, according to the Annals of the Four Masters, Mac Giolla Epscoip (Mac Gilles-pick), of this race, was chief of Clann Aeilabhra, and legislator of the tribe of Monach.

^w Unfree tribes, daer-chlanna.—The celebrated Irish antiquary, Dubhaltach Mac Firbisigh, mentions, in the preface to his smaller genealogical work, six classes of daer-chlanna among the ancient Irish, in terms which run as follows:

The Athach Tuath, or daer-chlann before mentioned: 1. The first race of them was the remnant of the Fir Bolg themselves, together with the remnant of the Tuath De Danann 2. The second race, the people who passed from their own countries,—they being descended from saer-chlann,—who went under daer-chios (servile rent) to another tribe. 3. The third people were the race of saer-chlann, whose land was converted into fearann cloidhimh (sword-land or conquered country) in their own territory, and who remained in it, in bondage, under the power of their enemies. 4. The fourth race were people of saer-chlann, who passed into bondage for their evil deeds, and who lost their blood and their land through their evil deeds, according to the law. 5. The fifth people were those who came (descended) from stranger soldiers, i. e. from external mercenaries, who left posterity in Eire. 6. The sixth race were the people who were descended from the bondmen who came with the children of Milcadh (Milesius) into Eire.

Thus, the daer-chlanna were not always

Such are his rents to assist him,

 Besides what the unfree tribes* of his kingdom [pay]
 In what they owe. ENTITLED.

slaves, nor of ignoble descent. They were sometimes men of the chieftain's own race, but who had lost their privileges in consequence of their crimes; and very often families of best Milesian blood, who were expelled from their own native territories, and who had settled in other territories, where they were admitted on condition of rendering tributes and services not required of those who were native there. See Tribes and Customs of the Ui Maine, p. 84, where it is stated that the family of O'Macilfinnain (who were of noble race) were among the daer-thuatha of Ui Maine on account of their exile; and that the arch-chiefs of

Ui Maine could increase the rents on all the daer-thuatha, ad libitum.

In the prose, p. 108, the correlative terms saer-thuatha and daer-thuatha occur. The relation is not fully expressed by the terms of the translation, "noble tribes" and "unfree tribes." Strictly, the tuatha were the territories, inhabited by the clanna or tribes. The saer-chlanna were tribes of equal nobility with the chieftain; their tributes and privileges were fixed, and it is about them that the book before us is principally conversant; the daer-chlanna were of the inferior castes above indicated, and were subject to arbitrary tributes.

IV.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF TEAMHAIR.

OF THE RIGHT of the king of Teamhair (Tara) here.

When the king of Teamhair is not king of Eire, he is entitled to receive a hundred swords and a hundred shields and a hundred steeds and a hundred colored dresses and a hundred coats of mail; these are from the king of Eire to the king of Teamhair.

From the king of Teamhair, too, to the kings and territories of Midhe (Meath) :

Twenty drinking-horns, twenty swords, twenty bondmen, twenty greyhounds to the king of Breagh.

Five shields, five swords and five cloaks and five steeds and five hounds to the king of Magh Locha.

Ten steeds, ten bondmen, ten women, ten drinking-horns to the king of Laeghaire.

Seven shields and seven steeds and seven bondmen and seven women and seven hounds to the king of Ardghal.

Seven steeds, seven swords, seven drinking-horns, seven cloaks to the king of Feara Ceall.

Six steeds, six swords, six shields, six bondmen to the king of Feara Tulach.

Eight shields, eight swords, eight drinking-horns, eight steeds to the king of Feara Teabhtha.

Six shields, six horses, six cloaks, six bondmen, six drinking-horns to the king of Cuirene.

Five steeds, five swords, five cloaks to the king of Uí Beccón.

Five women, five steeds, five drinking-horns, five shields to the king of Caille Fhállamhain.

Eight bondmen and eight women and eight steeds and eight shields and eight swords to the king of Dealbhua Mor. Of which the gifted historical adept Bénéan sang :

^b Magh Locha.—The name of this territory is preserved in that of the parish of "Moylagh," in the barony of "Fore," or "Demifore," as it was till recently called, in East Meath; but the territory was certainly more extensive than the parish which retains the name.

^c Laeghaire.—A territory in East Meath, which comprised the baronies of "Upper and Lower Navan." This was the inheritance of O'Coinnealbain (Quinlan), the senior representative of the monarch Laeghaire, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages.

territory of Fears Ceall, i. e. men of the churches, which comprised the modern baronies of "Fireall," "Ballycowan," and "Ballyboy," in the King's County. This was the most southern territory of the ancient Midhe (Meath), and is still comprised in the southern portion of the diocese of Meath. It was bounded on the south by Eile Uí Chearbhaill, which was a part of Munster. After the establishment of surnames, the dominant family in this territory took the name of O'Mael-mhuaidh, now Anglicized O'Molloy. The celebrated churches of Rathin Mochuda, Lann Elo (Lynally), Druim Cuillen, Dur-mhagh Choluim Chille (Darrow), and Rath Libhthen, are mentioned by old writers as in this territory. See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 910, 962; Colgan's Trias Thaum. p. 373, n. 26; Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, 10th June.

in this territory took the surname of O'Dubhlaighe (O'Dooley). They were dispossessed by the O'Maeil-eachlainns (O'Melaghlins) and the Anglo-Norman family of Tyrrell, and they settled in Eile Uí Chearbhaill (Ely O'Carroll), where they are still numerous. See Feilire Aenghuis, 9th January; O h-Uidhrin's topographical poem; Colgan's Acta SS. p. 135; and Mac Fírbisigh's pedigree of O'Maeil-eachlainn.

² Teabhtha.—This name, also written Teabhha, Teathfa, was Latinized "Teffia." See pp. 10, 11, nn. ^u, ^x. In St. Patrick's time it was applied to a very extensive territory forming the north-west portion of the ancient Midhe (Meath). It was divided into two parts by the River Eithne (Inny), called North and South Teabhtha, the former comprising nearly all the present county of Longford, and the latter about the western half of the present county of Westmeath, namely, the districts of Calraidhe, Breagh-mhaine ("Brawnney"), Cuircne (now the barony of "Kilkenny West"), besides the lands assigned to the Tuites, Petits, and Daltons, and the barony of "Kilcoursey" in the north of the King's County. But the Conmaicne or Ui Fearghail (O'Farrells), gradually extended their power over the whole of North Teabhtha, and gave it their tribe-name of Anghaile, Anglicè "Annaly;" and after the English invasion various families of Anglo-Normans settled in South Teabhtha, so that the ancient Irish chieftains of the territory, namely, the Ui Catharnaigh (O'Carneys, now Foxes), were driven into a very narrow stripe of it, namely, into the present barony of "Kilcoursey," to which they gave their tribe-name of Muintir Thadhgain. See the Feilire Aenghuis at 6th February; Colgan's Trias Thaum., p. 133; O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 85; Lanigan's Ecl. History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 100; and the Miscellany of the Irish Archaeological Society, pp. 184, 185.

^h Cuirene of the Caladh, i. e. of the marshy district, the local meaning of the word caladh, "callow," along the River Sionainn (Shannon). This territory is still called in Irish Cuireneach, and comprises the entire of the present barony of "Kilkenny West," in Westmeath, and that part of the parish of Forgnuidhe (Forgney), lying on the south side of the River Eithne (Inny). After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the name of O'Tolairg, a name now, probably, unidentifiable. After the English invasion the ancient families of Cuirene were dispossessed by the Dillons. See the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 2, published by Colgan in his Trias Thaum., p. 129; D. Mac Firlisigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 115, 308, 309, 330; O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. cc. 81, 85; and the Editor's edition of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 822, n. p. See also the Feilire Aenghuis, at 13th October, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 11th July, 13th October, and 18th December, from which it will appear that the churches of Disert

¹ Ui Beccon, i. e. the race of Beg-on (a man's name signifying "of little blemish"), who was seventh in descent from Eochaidh Muigh-mheadhoin, monarch of Ireland in the fourth century. See Genealogies, Tribes, and Customs of Ui Fiachrach, p. 13. This tribe is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 1066, and their territory of "Tir Beccan," at the year 1159. This territory would appear to be included in the present barony of "Rathoath," in the county of Meath, where there is a fort and parish called Rath

Beccon.

² Caille an Ollaimh, i. e. the wood of the Ollaih, or chief professor. It is more correctly called Caille Fhallamhain, i. e. Fallamhan's (Fallon's) wood, in the prose anatomy of this poem. The situation of this territory appears from a note in the Feilire Aenghuis at the 14th September, and also from the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at the same day, which place in it the church of Roseach (Russagh), in the barony of "Moygoish," and county of Westmeath.

³ Dealbhna, the "Delvins," scilicet, the districts so called in Meath. These were

That is the history of the king of Teamhair;
It is not known to every prattling bard^l;
It is not the right of a bard, but the right of a poet
To know each king and his right. . . . THE RIGHTS.

THE STIPENDS of the kings of the territories of Midhe (Meath) are as we have said.

Dealbhna Mor, now called the barony of "Delvin," in the county of Westmeath; Dealbhna Beag, now called the barony of "Demi Fore," in the same county; Dealbhna Eathra, now called the barony of "Garrycastle" in the King's Co., and Dealbhna Teannmuigh, which was a part of Teathbha, the exact situation of which has not been yet determined. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 82, and D. Mac Firbisigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 57, 315. See page 105, note γ, suprà, for the tribes of this name seated in the province of Connacht. After the establishment of surnames, O'Fionnallain was the chief of Dealbhna Mor; O'Macil-chalainn (Mulholland), of Dealbhna Beag; Mac Cochlain (Mac Coghlan), of Dealbhna Eathra; and O'Scolaidhe (Scully), of Dealbhna Teannmuigh, which was otherwise called Dealbhna Iarthair, or western Dealbhna. See O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, in which this last-mentioned territory is placed in the country of "Teathbha."

²⁷ Conn of the Hundred Battles.—He became monarch of Ireland A. D. 177. See Ogygia, part iii. c. 70.

²⁸ Deise.—The people so called were descended from Fiacha Suighdhe, the elder brother of Conn of the Hundred Battles. They were seated in, and gave name to the territory of Deise Teampach, now called the barony of "Decce," in the county of

Meath. They are said to have been expelled thence by their relative Cormac, the grandson of Conn of the Hundred Battles, about the year 254, when they settled in the present county of Waterford. See page 49, note ^k; but it would appear from this poem that they were in Meath at the time of its composition, unless by Deise in the text we are to understand not the tribe but

The rents and the customs and the refections of the king of Teamhair from his chieftains here, as they yielded and paid them to Conn and to Cormac and to Cairbre, from whom (i. e. from whose race) they subsequently selected kings. The tribute and the payment must be the same [at all times] without any addition for increased wealthiness, without any deficiency for impoverishment, unless in case of a destruction of the tribe, or plague, or famine, or mortality,—to be levied, be it great or be it little, every year. The third of this tribute, for collecting it, belongs to the local families of Teamhair, for store and provision for them, and to be stored by them for future occasion; of which Benean said:

THE TRIBUTES of the territories of Midhe, great the narrative,
 A truly potent poet has related,
 As they are rendered to Teamhair in the east,
 From the time of Conn of the Hundred Battles^m.

Entitled is the king of Teamhair of the territories,—
 A chief who possesses [his kingdom] with a choice host,—
 To fifty oxen from the tribe of Deiseⁿ,
 Fifty sows, fifty young pigs.

Thirty oxen from Dal Iarthair^o,
 Thirty sows, which is a tribute to be talked of,
 Thirty wethers, good the store,
 To the king of Midhe of much money.

Three hundred oxen from the Dealbhna^p
 To be conveyed to Teamhair,
 Three hundred hogs, three hundred tinnes (salted pigs),
 Three hundred wethers from the great tribe.

the territory to which they had given name, but in which a tribe of a different race were then established. There are many instances of this in Ireland, as Tir Oiliolla, in the county of Sligo, and Tir Eanna, in the county of Donegal, &c., which retained names derived from ancient proprietors, though their races either became extinct, or were supplanted by others.

^o Dal Iarthair, i. e. the Western Tribe. This name does not occur in the Irish Annals or in any other authority that the Editor has ever seen. It was evidently a name applied to a tribe in the west of Westmeath.

This was a territory of considerable extent in Meath, and its name is still preserved in that of the small barony of "Lune," near the town of Trim, in the west of the county of East Meath; but the territory of Luighne was much more extensive than the modern barony, for we learn from the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick published by Colgan, lib. ii. c. 10, Trias Thaum., p. 130, that the church of Domhnach Mor Muighe Eachnach, "Donaghmore," near the town of "Navan," was in this territory. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Braein (O'Breen), but he is to be distinguished from O'Braein, of Breagh-mhaine (Brawny), in Westmeath, who is descended from Maine, the fourth son of the monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages; whereas O'Braein of Luighne, in Meath, is of the race of Cormac Gailiang, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, cc. 69, 85. See also O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, and Annals of the Four Masters, A. D. 1201; and p. 103, n. ^b, suprà.

¹¹ Feara Arda, i. e. the men of the heights, now the barony of "Ferrard," forming the southern portion of the county of Louth. The hills of Sliabh Breagh extend across this barony, from near "Collon" to "Clogher Head," and from this range of hills this people took their name. The territory was otherwise called Arda Cianachta. The churches of Cluain Mor and Disert Meithle Caeile are mentioned in the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, as in this territory. See Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, lib. ii. c. 48, and Colgan's note in Trias Thaum., p. 177, note 90. O'Dubhagain does not mention this territory under either name in his topographical poem, nor is it referred to in the Irish Annals after the tenth century, so that we have no means of determining the name of the principal family seated here before the English invasion. This barony, and all the region extending from Glais Neara, near Druim Inasluin (Drumiskin), in the county of Louth, to Cnocaihb Maeldoid, at the River Liffey (but not including Teamhair or Tara) were granted to Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum, by king Cormac, the son of Art, after the battle of Crinna, fought A. D. 254. See Annals of

For some notices of the chiefs of this tribe of the Cianachta, see Annals of Tighearnach at the years 662, 688, 735, 742, 748, 749; and Annals of the Four Masters at the years 226, 528, 570, 732, 765, 789, 848, 849, and 918.

* Saithne.—This tribe were descended from Glasradh, the second son of Cormac Gaileang, son of Tadhg, son of Cian, son of Oilíoll Olum. They were a subsection of the Cianachta Breagh, and were seated near the sea, in the east of "Bregia," or "Fingall," to the north of Dublin. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. c. 69, and D. Mac Fírbisigh's genealogical work (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), pp. 348, 353. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Caithne, now Anglicè Casey; they were dispossessed by Sir Hugh de Lacy, who sold their lands, as we are informed by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. 24, where he states that Philippus Wigorniensis, Justiciary of Ireland, seized on the lands of "Ocathesi," to the king's use, though Hugh de Lacy had formerly sold them. According to Alan's Register, fol. 21, amongst other grants, king John, when he was Earl of Morton, confirmed to Archbishop Comyn "Medietatem Decimarum Terre O'Kadesi, de Ffinegall." And in the same Register, fol. 110, is contained a charter by which John Archbishop of Dublin grants "omnes ecclesias, capellas, et decimas de totâ terrâ que fuit O'Kadesi, que in parochiâ Dublin est," to the prior and convent of Laothonia, Gloucester, and in which the following places are mentioned as in it, viz.: "Ecclesia de Villâ Ogari, cum capellâ que quondam fuit Richardi Camerarii; ecclesia de Sancto Nemore [Holywood] cum capellâ que dicitur Gratas; ecclesia de Villâ Stephani de Cruces cum pertinentibus suis," &c. Ecclesia de Villâ Macdun cum decimis; et Villa Willielmi Bartinet et Ecclesia de Terrâ Rogeri de Waspeile et ecclesia de Villâ Radulphi Pastons et capella Richardi Lafelde."

In D'Alton's History of the County of Dublin, p. 497, the parish "De Sancto Nemore," i. e. Holywood, is called the church of St. Nemore.

^v Gaileanga.—This tribe also was descended from Cormac Gaileang, son of Tadúg, son of Cian, son of Oilioll Olun. There were two territories of this name in the ancient Midhe (Meath), the one called Gaileanga Mora, or the Great Gaileanga, the name of which is still preserved in that of the barony of Mór-gaileang, Anglicè

"Morgallion," in the county of Meath; but the territory was more extensive than the barony, for we learn from the gloss to the Feilire Aenghais, 13th October, that the mountainous district of Sliabh Guaire, now a part of the barony of "Clankee," in the county of Cavan, originally belonged to Gaileanga, Finnpech, uirgo, ḡErnaidhe nomen civitatis eius, hi Sleibh Guaire, h. n-Gaileangab, i. e. Finnseach Virgo et Ernaidhe nomen civitatis ejus in Sliabh Guaire in Gaileangais. The other, called Gaileanga Beaga, was situate in Bregia, in East Meath, near the River Liffey. Its position is known only from the fact that the monastery of Glais Naeidhin (Glasnevin), near Dublin, was in it. Dr. Lanigan asserts that Gláis-naidhen must have been on the south side of the River Liffey, for no other reason than because Rawson, in his Introduction to the Statistical Survey of Kildare, had said or conjectured that Caëlan was bounded by the Liffey on the north; but Rawson was misled by Beauford, who forged an ancient Topography of Ireland, which was published in the eleventh number of the Collectanea. According to O'Dubhagain's topographical poem, O'Leochain, Anglicè "Loughan," and Barbaricè "Duck," was chief of Gaileanga Mora, and O h-Aenghusa (Hennessy), of Gaileanga Beaga. Both were dispossessed by Sir Hugh de Lacy,

He merely remarks:

“Thus I find the will of king Cathair has been committed to writing.” The words of Cathair's will are in that peculiar metre called by the Irish poets “Rithlearg” (and “Ritairc”), an example of which occurs in the Battle of Magh Rath, p. 154, and many other examples will be found in the ancient Irish historical tale called “Forbais

V. THE PRIVILEGES OF THE KING OF LAIGHIN, WITH THE WILL OF CATHAEIR MOR.

HERE IS THE TESTAMENT OF CATHAEIR MOR^a to his children, to his principal sons and his heirs, and he gave to each son of them a part of his patrimony and of his wealth.

And he said to Ros Failghe^b, blessing him;—

“ MY SOVEREIGNTY, my splendor,
My nobleness, my vigor,
My wealth, my strength,
My power of protection
To my fierce Ros, to my vehement Failghe,
That they may be the memorials of succession
To every one [of his race] on whom they descend,
For to him belongs to make presents,
That he is not to hoard wealth perpetually,
[But] let him give unto all fair wages;
Clement is the great and comely hero,
My vehement son, smooth-minded,
Victorious in his border-battles;
He shall contend for the plain of Teamhair,
He shall not abandon it to his relatives;

Droma Damghaire,” preserved in the Book of Lios Mor (Lismore), in the Library of the R. Irish Academy. See Introduction.

Cathaeir Mor was monarch of Ireland in the second century. According to the Irish genealogists he had three wives and thirty sons, but only the ten mentioned in this will had issue. See O’Fla. Ogygia, p. iii. c. 59.

^b Ros Failghe, i. e. Ros of the rings. He is the ancestor of the Ui Failghe, of whom O’Conchobhair Failghe (O’Conor Faly), and O’Diomasaigh (O’Dempsey) of Clann Macliaghra (Clanmalier), and O’Duinn (O’Dunne) of Iregan, were the most distinguished families after the establishment of surnames. ^e Daire Barrach.—He was the ancestor of the family of Mac Gorman, chief of the Ui Bairrehe, for the situation of which see page 212, n. m, infra. St. Fiac of Sleibhte, now “Slatey,” in “Omargy,” is said to have been the great-grandson of this Daire Barrach, and St. Diarmad, the founder of the church of Gleann Uissen, a remarkable valley, situate two miles to the west of Carlow, was the sixth in descent from him, according to the O'Clérighs.

^d Deas Ghabhair.—According to the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 920, this was another name for Ui Ceinnsealaigh. See the Introduction.

^e Gailians.—An old name of the Laighnigh, or Leinstermen. See Introduction.

^f Eight bondmen.—O'Flaherty says, ubi

He will give his aid to my steadfast sons
 Against the attacks of their enemies;
 To the multitudinous day of judgment [is this] blessing,— Better than every man shall Failghe Ros be.”

And he gave him ten shields and ten rings and ten swords and ten drinking-horns, and he said to him,—

“NOBLEST SHALL BE thy descendants among the descendants of my children.”

Then he said to Daire Barrach^c:

“MY VALOR, my martial impetuosity
 To my fierce, vigorous Daire;
 The darling of the assembly
 Shall every steadfast son of the tribes of thy loins be;
 O Daire, with boldness
 Sit on the frontier of Tuath Laighean (north Leinster);
 Thou shalt harass the lands of Deas Ghabhair^d (south Leinster);
 Receive not price for thy protection;
 Thy daughters shall be blessed with fruitfulness
 If they wed; thy old father
 Cathaeir, the head of this province,
 Gives thee his benediction
 That thou shouldst be a powerful champion Over the green Gailians^e.” MY VALOR.

And he gave him, thereupon, eight bondmen^f and eight women and eight steeds and eight drinking-horns.

He said afterwards to Breasal Eineach-ghlais^g:

suprà, that before king “Cathir” fell in the battle of “Talten,” he ordered his son, “Ross Failge,” to give legacies to the rest of his sons, and to the other nobles of Leinster, and that he presented “to Daire Barry one hundred round spears, with silver blades, fifty shields in cases of gold and

or Ui Feineachlais, who were seated along the sea to the north of the Ui Deaghaidh, and in the present barony of Arklow, in the county of Wicklow. This tribe is incorrectly called “Ui Incachruis,” in all the copies of O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem. The church of Inis Mocholmog belonged to this territory. See the Feilire Aenghais, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, at 14th November.

^b Inbhear Aimherghin.—So called because this was the portion of the country which fell to the lot of Aimherghin, one of the sons of Milidh (Milesius), and the poet and judge of their expedition. This is more usually called Inbhear Mor. It was originally the estuary of the Abhainn Mhor (Avonmore), but it was afterwards, after a manner used elsewhere, applied to the town of Arklow, which, after the Danish and

 For the crime of the arm of an unjust man;
 And though it shall return again,
 It shall not be a happy possession
 Because it shall be liable to oppression.”

And he gave to him six shipsⁱ and six coats of mail and six tunics and six shields and six steeds; and he gave him his own six oxen with all their appointments.

And he said to Ceatach^k:

“MY LANDS external [to my mensal lands]
 [I give] to my beloved Ceatach;
 It will be a violent destruction to thy brotherhood;
 Though thou wilt be for a time in possession of a free inheritance,
 From thee none shall be begotten.”

And he did not give his testamentary portion to him.
 Then he said to Fearghus Luascan;

“FEARGHUS, a man of purity,
 He speaks of his infantine rockings;

English invasions, became the principal fortress of Ui Eineach-ghlais. According to O'h-Uidriú's topographical poem, “O'Fiachra” was the chief of this tribe after the establishment of surnames.

ⁱ Six ships, &c.—O'Flaherty says that “Cathir” gave “Breasal Enachlas” five ships of burden, fifty bossed shields, superbly inlaid with silver and gold round the edges, five golden-hilted swords, and five chariots with their horses. This is a further proof that the document consulted by O'Flaherty was totally different from any of the copies now known to exist.

^k Ceatach.—This is probably the Ceatach after whom the barony of Ui Ceataigh (Ikeathy), in the north of Kildare, received its name. The criocha scahtar were the lands which were not mensal, or parcel of the king's inheritance or succession.

("Terryglass," near the Shannon, in Lower Ormond, Tipperary), where his festival was celebrated on the 13th of December. The O'Clerighs remark that he was really the son of Nimidh, who was the fifth in descent from Crimthann, the son of Cathair Mor. He should therefore have been called

And he gave him no testamentary [share]; but he forbade him not to live with his brothers as a cogartⁿ (steward).

He said to Oilioll Ceadach^o, the son of Cathair:

“OILIOLL, a great man in the possession
 Of old plains of old brughaidhs [farmers];
 Noble shall not be thy rath [abode];
 A man intelligent in chess playing,
 [Who shall rule] over many prosperous plains.”

And he gave his chess-board and his fithcheallacht^p (chess furniture) to Oilioll Ceadach.

Then Fiacha Ba h-Aicidh went to his father, and he was the youngest of his sons, and the father said to him:

“I HAVE NOT AUGHT that thou couldst take with thee but my blessing and that thou abide with each of thy brethren till thou art of maturity.”

The youth Fiacha wept in the presence of his father; his father, i. e. Cathair, then said unto him:

“ABIDE A MONTH with each of thy brothers, and abide seven years with Ros Failghe the son of Cathair. If, then, thou retain the blessing I would ensure to thee prosperity of possessions.”

And then Cathair said:

“A CHIEF shall the prosperous junior be,
 Fiacha a man of many hundreds [of cattle]; tribe and territory containing about the northern half of the present county of Kildare. It comprised the baronies of "Clane" and "Salt," and the greater part, if not the entire, of those of "Ikeathy" and "Oughteranny." The town of Nas (Naas), and the churches of Claenadh (Clane), Laithreach Bruin (Laraghbrine, near "Maynooth"), Domnach mor Muighe Luadhat (Donaghmore), Cluain Conaire (Cloncurry); and Fiodh Chuillinn (Feighcullen), were in it. See the Feilire Aenghuis, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 18th May, 8th June, 8th August, 2nd and 16th of September, and 27th of October. After the establishment of surnames the chiefs of this territory took that of Mac Faelain, and soon after that of O'Brain (Anglicè O'Byrne), but they were driven from this level and fertile territory, about the year 1202, by Meyler Fitz-Henry and his followers, when they retired into the mountains of Wicklow, where they acquired new settlements for themselves, and in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth they were possessed of more than the southern half of the present county of Wicklow. See the Editor's translation of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, p. 137, note ^e, and page 246, note ^f, where authorities are quoted which prove the Ui Faelain, Anglicè "Offelan," the original country of the Ui Brain (O'Byrnes), comprised the five northern baronies of the present county of Kildare, and that it was bounded on the north by Deise Teamhrach, on the west by Ui Failghe, on the north-east by Ui Dunchada, and on the south by Ui Muireadh-

^d Forthuatha, i. e. the stranger tribe. It appears from an old life of St. Caemhghin (Kevin), quoted by Ussher in his Primordia, p. 956, and by the Bollandists, that the church of Gleann Da Loch, i. e. Vallis duorum stagnorum (Glendalough), was in this territory. This shows that it was an aliàs name for Ui Mail, as, according to a note in the Feilire Aenghais and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clerighs, at 7th October, Ui Mail is the name of the territory in which Gleann Da Loch is situated. Ui Mail (Imaille) is a well-known territory in the barony of Upper Talbotstown, in the county of Wicklow, in which the family of O'Tuathail (O'Toole) settled after their expulsion from their original territory of Ui Muireadhaigh in the now county of Kildare, by the Baron Walter de Riddlesford. See the Editor's translation of the Annals of the Four Masters, page 51, n. ^c, and page 664, note ^z; also the published Inquisitions, "Lagenia," Wicklow, 6 Jac. I., 8 Car. I. Dombnall Mac Faelainn, king of Forthuatha Laigleán, was slain in the battle of Chain Tarbh (Clontarf) according to the Annals of Ulster.

^e Inbhear, i. e. of Inbhear Mor (Arklow). The territory of the Inbhear (originally the estuary merely) was the country of the Ui Einnech-ghlais, which comprised the present barony of Arklow, in the county of Wicklow. See page 196, note ^b, suprà.

^f Ui Feilmeadha, i. e. the descendants of Feilimidh, son of Eanna Ceinnsealach, king of Laighin (Leinster) in the fourth century. There were two tribes of this name in Leinster, the one called Ui Feilmeadha Tuaidh, i. e. North Ui Feilmeadha, who were seated in the present barony of "Rathvilly," in the county of Carlow, and from whom the present town of "Tullow," in that barony, was anciently called Tulaigh O'Feilmeadha, Anglicè Tullow-Offelimy.— See Keating's History of Ireland, in the reign of Niall Naei-ghiallach. After the establishment of surnames, the chief family of this tribe took the surnames of O'h-Oncon, a name now unknown, and O'Gairbheth (Garvey). The other tribe was called Ui Feilmeadha Teas or Deas, i. e. South Ui Feilmeadha, and was seated in the present barony of "Ballaghkeen" in the east of the county of Wexford. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this tribe took that of O'Murchadha, Anglicè, formerly, "O'Murroughoe," now "Murphy," and the family multiplied so much that this is now the most numerous of all the ancient Irish tribes, not only in their own territory, still called the

"Murroughs" or "Munroes," but all over Leinster and Munster. See O h-Uidhriú's topographical poem, and the Book of Leinster, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, Hen. II. 18, fol. 247. In the year 1634, the head of the South Ui Feilmeadha was Conall O'Murchadha (son of Art, son of Domhnall Mor, son of Art, son of Tadhg). He died in this year, and was buried at Castle Ellis. He had five sons, of whom Tadhg was the eldest. There was another respectable branch of this family seated at Óbail-ṡorpe liaé (Onartleigh) in the same district, who retained their property till very recently.

^g Ui Ceinnsealaigh.—The people so called were the descendants of Eanna Ceinnsealach, who was the fourth in descent from Cathaeir, monarch of Ireland, and king of Laighin or Leinster, about the year 358. Their country originally comprised more than the present diocese of "Fernes," for we learn from the oldest Lives of St. Patrick, that Domhnach Mor, near Sleibhte (Sletty, Sleaty, &c.), in the present county of Carlow, was in it. In the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, quoted by Ussher (Primordia, page 863) it is Six coats of mail and six ships,

Six beautiful, bay steeds.

Seven steeds to the fair Ui Feilmeadha^f,
Vehement men of venom,
Five curved drinking-horns with five cloaks,
Five matals, as it is remembered.

called the larger and more powerful part of Leinster: "Ordinavit S. Patricius de gente Laginensium alium episcopum nomine Fyacha, virum religiosissimum: qui jussione beatissimi Patricii gentem Ceanselach ad fidem convertit et baptizavit."

The two clans of Ui Feilmeadha above referred to were of this race. After the establishment of surnames the principal family of this tribe took the surname of Mac Murchadha, Anglicè "Mac Murrongh," which is now obsolete. The principal family of the race took the name of Mac Murchadha Caemhanaigh, Anglicè "Mac Murrongh Kavanagh," now always shortened to "Kavanagh," without any prefix. They descend from Domhnall Caemhanach, who, according to Giraldus, and the historical poem in Norman French on the invasion of Ireland, tempore Henry II., and a pedigree of the Kavanaghs in a MS. at Lambeth Palace, was an illegitimate son of Diarmaid, Dermotus Murchardides, (Dermod), king of Leinster, the first that brought the English into Ireland. From Eanna, another illegitimate son of this king, the family of "Kinsellaghs," now so numerous in Leinster, are descended. The other families of the race were Mac Daibhidh Mor, Anglicè Mac Davy More, or Mac Damore, seated in the barony of "Gorey," in the north-east of the county of Wexford, who were descended from Murchadh na n-Gaedhall, the brother of Diarmaid na n-Gall, and Mac Uadog, Anglicè "Mac Vaddock," and now "Maddock," who descends from Uadog, the fourth in descent from the same Murchadh. The pedigrees of these septs are given by Dubh. Mac Firbisigh in his genealogical work (Lord Roden's copy), p. 473, and by Cucoicrigh O'Clery (Peregrine O'Clery) in his genealogical compilation, now preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, p. 82, and also in a MS. in the Carew Collection in the Library at Lambeth Palace, No. 635, fol. 40, 41, et sequen.

^h Saddles, ῥαδαῖ.—We have no means of determining what kind of saddles these were. The present Irish word for saddle is ῥαλλαῖο, which seems cognate with the Welsh word dilhad, apparel. Spenser asserts, in his "View of the State of Ireland," that the Irish rode without a stirrup. It is said in the Histoire du Roy d'Angleterre Richard, recently printed in the twentieth volume of the Archæologia, with translation and notes, by the Rev. J. Webb, that Mac Murrough of Leinster was mounted upon a horse which cost four hundred cows, but without a saddle.

¹ Raeilinn.—This was the name of a remarkable fort on the hill of Mullach Raileann, Anglicè “Mullaghreelion,” in the county of Kildare, about five miles to the south-east of Athy. This fort is called Raerend in the Leabhar Dinnsenchuis, which places it in the country of Ui Muireadhaigh, called by Cambrensis “Omurethi,” which is still the name of a deanery in the county of Kildare. By “Riğh Raileann,” in the text, is certainly meant Riğh Ua Muireadhaigh, i. e. king of “Omurethi,” a territory comprising about the southern half of the present county of Kildare, namely, the baronies of “Kilkea and Moone,” “Naragh and Rheban,” and a part of the barony of “Connell.” It was bounded on the north by the celebrated hill of Aillin (Allen), see page 202, note¹, suprà; on the north-east by Ui Fáilghe, Anglicè “Offaly,” which it adjoined at the Cuirreach (Curragh) of Kildare, see page 216, note¹, infra; and on the west by Lacighis, Anglicè “Leix,” from which it was divided by the River Bearbha, Anglicè Barrow. The deanery of “Omurethi,” which preserves the name of this territory, comprises the following parishes, according to the Liber Regalis Visitationis of 1615, viz.: “Athy, Castlereban, Kilberry, Dollardstown, Nicholastown, Tankardstown, Kilkea, Grange-Rosnolvan, Belin [Beithlinn], Castledermott, Grange, Moone, Timoling, Nárraghmore, Kilcullen, Usk.” And the same record adds: “Adjacent to the deanery of Omurethie is the parish church of Dame-noge [Dunamanogue] and the parish church of Fontstown.” From this the glaring error of Ledwich (Antiquities, 2nd ed. p. 294), appears, who states that the Omurethi of Giraldus was the country of the O'Moores.

Soon after the death of the celebrated Saint Lorcan O'Tuathail, Anglicè Laurence O'Toole, the family of the Ui Tuathail (O'Tooles) were driven from this level and fertile district by the great Baron Walter de Riddlesford, or Gualterns de Ridencsfordia, who, according to Giraldus (Hibernia Expugnata, lib. ii. c. 21), had his castle at “Tristerdermott,” (now “Castledermot”), in the territory of “Omurethi.” Dr. Lanigan, in his Ecclesiastical History of Ireland, vol. iv. p. 174, and Mr. Moore, in his History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 308, and all subsequent writers, state that Muircheartach O'Tuathail, the father of St. Lorcan O'Tuathail (Laurence O'Toole), was prince of "Imaile," but this is a great mistake; for Ui Mail (Imaile), into which the tribe of O'Tuathail migrated, had been before the English invasion the patrimonial inheritance of the family of O'Tadhg, Anglicè, formerly, O'Teige, now Tighe. Equally erroneous is the statement in the Life of "St. Laurence," published by Messingham in his Florilegium, that St. Laurence's father was king of all Leinster; for we know from the best authorities, that, though he was of the royal family of Leinster, and next in superiority of that province, he never became king of it.

1 Fothart Osnadhaigh, now the barony of Fotharta, Anglicè "Forth," in the county of Carlow. The people called Fotharta were, according to the Irish genealogists, the descendants of Eochadh Finn Fuathart (the brother of the monarch Conn of the Hundred Battles) who, being banished from Midhe (Meath) by his nephew Art, monarch of Ireland, settled in Laignin (Leinster) where his descendants acquired considerable territories, of which the barony of "Forth," in the county of Carlow, and the better known barony of the same name in the county of Wexford, still preserve the name. The former is called Fotharta Osnadhaigh in the text, from Cill Osnadha, now corruptly "Kellistown," one of its principal churches, but more frequently "Fotharta Fea," from the plain of Magh Fea, in which this church is situate. See Book of Baile an Mhuta, fol. 77, b., and Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Oilíoll Molt, where it is stated that Cill Osnadha is situate in the plain of Magh Fea, four (Irish) miles to the east of Leith-ghlinn (Leighlin), in the county of Carlow. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of Fotharta Fea, or Fotharta Osnadhaigh, took the surname of O'Nuallain, Anglicè, formerly, O'Nolan, now Nowlan, and from him this barony has been not unusually called "Forth O'Nolan." See the published Inquisitions, Lagenia, 14, 16 Car. I. Grace's Annals of Ireland, edited by the Rev. Richard Butler, p. 99, et passim. O'Flaherty states in his Ogygia, part iii. c. 64, that the posterity of Eochaidh Finn Fothart were chiefs of this territory till the death of O'Nuallan, the last proprietor, who died a short time before he was writing. The chief family of the Fotharta, in the county of Wexford, commonly called Fothart an Chairn (Carnsore point), took the name of O'Loeain, Anglicè "Larkin," but they were dispossessed shortly after the English invasion. The family is, however, still numerous in Leinster. See farther as to these districts, page 221, note 3, infra.

^k Ui Drona, i. e. nepotes Dronai.—These descend from Drona, the fourth in descent from Cathaer Mor. They possessed the entire of the present barony of "Idrone," in the county of Carlow, and that part of the diocese of "Kildare and Leighlin," lying on the west side of the River Barrow, near the town of "Graigue-namanagh." The church of Erard or Urard, now called "Ullard," on the west side of the Barrow, was in it. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 2nd May, 18th August, 11th October, and 8th November; and the Feilire Aenghuis, at 8th February, 29th May, 18th August, 5th September, 11th and 12th October, and 8th November. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this tribe took the surname of O'Riain, Anglicè "Ryan," and retained considerable property in this barony, till the Revolution in 1688, as appears from the published Inquisitions, Lagenia, 9, 40 Car. I. They are still very numerous in this territory, and throughout Leinster, but they are to be distinguished from the family of O'Macilriain (O'Mulrians or Ryans), of Tipperary, who are of a different race, though of Leinster too. See a curious account of this family in Ryan's History of the County of Carlow, Appendix.

^l Ceann Gabhra, i. e. head of the horse. This name, which was evidently that of some remarkable hill in "Idrone," is unknown to the Editor.

^m Ui Bairrche.—This tribe descended from Daire Barrach, the second son of the monarch Cathaer Mor, and possessed the barony of "Slievemargy," in the Queen's County, and other tracts in that neighbourhood. They were seated between the Ui Drona and Ui Muireadhaigh; and the churches of Mngna h-Ealchainn (Ballaghmoon), and Gleann Uissen (Killushin), near the town of Carlow, were in it. See Colgan's Acta Sanctorum, pp. 417, 418; and Feilire Aenghuis, at 27th February, 4th April, 8th July, 20th October; and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 8th July. O h-Uidhrin places them on the west side of the River Barrow. D. Mac Firbisigh, in his pedigree of the Ui Bairrche (Marquis of Drogheda's copy), p. 397, states that the district extending from Ath Truistean, a ford on the river "Greece," near the hill of Mullach Maistean (Mullagmast) six miles to the east of Athy, in the county of Kildare, to the ford at Cill Corb-natan, belonged to this sept, and that there were families of the race seated at Cluain Conaire (Cloncurry), Ceall Ausaille (Killossy), in the county of Kildare; and three families at Cill ("Kill," near Naas), namely, O'Laidhgheinn, O'Caise, and O'Duibhchilline; and one family, namely O'Mathaidh, in the territory of Ui Eineach-ghlais Muighe. After the establishment of surnames the chief family took the name of "O'Gorman," or "Mac Gorman;" but they were driven out of their original territory, shortly after the English invasion, by the Baron Walter de Riddlesford, who became master of all the territory about Carlow. After this period they disappear from the Irish Annals for some centuries; but a curious account of their dispersion and settlement in Munster is given by Macilín Óg Mac Bruaideadha (Mac Brody), who became chief poet of Ui Breacain and Ui Fearmaic in 1563, in a poem on their genealogy, in which he states that they possessed the territories of Críoch O m-Bairrche and Críoch O m-Buidhe in Leinster, but, being driven from thence by the English, a party of them proceeded into Ulster and another into Uaitline (Woney, in Tipperary), where they settled at a place called Doire Seinliath, where they became very numerous. In process of time, however, they removed from this territory and settled under O'Briain (O'Brien) in Ui Breacain (Ibrickan), in the west of Tuath Mhunnha (Thomond), where the poet states they had been supporting poets and feeding the poor for the last four hundred years. See O'Reilly's Irish Writers, p. 164. The name of this family is always written Mac Gormain in the Irish annals, and on all the old tombstones of the family in the county of Clare; but the late Chevalier Thomas O'Gorman, the compiler of the pedigree of Count O'Reilly, changed the prefix, because he found it O'Gormain in some poems, and all the higher branches of the family have adopted the same change. This family is to be distinguished from the "O'Gormans" of "Clonnaicnoise," who took the surname of Mac Cuinn na m-Bocht.

^o Ui Buidhe.—The territory of this tribe is called Críoch O'Muighe [which is intended for Críoch Ua m-Buidhe] by Óh-Uídirín in his topographical poem, in which it is described as on the west side of the River

Bearbha (Barrow), which divides it from Ui Muireadhaigh. This helps us to fix its position; for we learn from the Life of St. "Abban" published by Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, xiii. p. 617, c. 25), that "Ceall Abbain" is in the territory of "Huamidhe," who, Colgan says in note 30, page 623, is "Huamudhe" in Codice Salmanticensi:

"Post hæc Sanctus Abbanus cum suis clericis fines Laginensium intravit, et venit in plebem Huathmarchy [Hua barchi in Cod. Sal.] et ipsa plebs honorificè recepit eum, et valdè gavisa est in ejus adventu. Et vir sanctus benedixit eam diligenter, et multis diversis languoribus ibi sanatis, et miraculis perpetratis, inde recessit in plebem Huamidhi [Huamudi in Cod. Sal.], ibique magnum monasterium construxit; et propter honorem ejus in eodem loco civitas ædificata est; et monasterium et civitas uno nomine Scoticè vocantur Ceall Abbain, quod interpretatur Latinè Cella Abbani."

The annotator of the Feilire Aenghais, at 27th October, and the O'Clérighs, in their Irish Calendar, at 16th March, place Cill Abbain in Ui Muireadhaigh; but this is evidently a mistake for Ui Muighe, for we learn from O h-Uidhrin that the territories of Crioch O'Muighe and Crioch O m-Barrtha were on the west side of the Bearbha, and Ui Muireadhaigh on the east side of the same river, which formed the boundary between them; and the old church and parish of "Killabban," are on the west side of the river, in the barony of "Ballyadams" and Queen's County. From the situation of Killabban and of Tullamoy [Tulaó Uam-ðuroé], and the old church near "Timahoe," in the same county, it is quite evident that the territory of Crioch O'm-Buidhe, 'or O'Muighe, is included in the present barony of Ballyadams. After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Caelluidhe (now "Kealy" and "Kelly"), but this name is to be distinguished from O'Ceallaigh, of which name there were two respectable families seated in the adjoining territories of Gailine and Magh Druchtain.

° The king of Gabhal, i. e. the king of the province of Laighin or Leinster.—This is still the name of a river which flowed through a wood called Fidh Gaibhle (Feegile or Figila), in the parish of Cloonsast, barony of "Coolestown," King's Co. See the Ordnance map of the King's County, sheets 19, 27, 28. In the Book of Leinster, T. C. D., H. 2, 18, fol. 112, a., is quoted a poem of St. Bearehan, the patron saint of "Cloonsast," who states that the wood derived its name from the River Gabhal, and that the river is called Gabhal from the gabhal, fork, which it forms at the junction of Cluain Sasta and Cluain Mor. The river is now called Fidh Gaibhle, though the wood has disappeared.

° Larighis.—A tribe giving name to a territory in the Queen's county, descended from Laeighseach Ceann-mhor, the son of Conall Cearnach, chief of the heroes of the Craebh Ruadh, or Red Branch, in Ulster in the first century. Lughaidh Laeighseach, the son of Laeighseach Ceann-mhor, obtained this territory from the king of Laighin (Leinster), in the reign of the monarch Feidlimidh Reachtmhar, for the assistance which he afforded in expelling the men of Munster, who had seized upon Osraidhe and all the province as far as the ford of Ath Truistean, near the hill of Mullach Maistean (Mullaghmast). See Translation of the Annals of "Clonmacnoise," by Connell Mageoghegan, and Keating's History of Ireland, reign of Feidhlimidh Reachtmhar. This territory originally comprised the present baronies of "East and West Maryborough," "Stradbally," and "Cullenagh," in the Queen's County. The churches of Disert mic Cuillinn, Cluain Eidlmeach, Cill Faelain, Menedroichet Eanach Truim (now Annatrim, in Upper Ossory), Cluain Fota, and Bochlunain, were in it. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs at 2nd January, 17th February, 16th September, 3rd and 29th November; and the Féilire Aenghuis, at 2nd and 20th January, 21st February, 3rd March, 4th April, 11th, 12th, and 20th June, 23rd August, 16th Sept., 6th and 13th October, 3rd, 13th, and 20th November. And on the increasing power of the tribe they attached the territories of Críoch O m-Buidhe and Críoch O m-Bairrche, or the baronies of "Ballyadams," and "Slievemargy," so that modern Irish antiquaries have considered Laeighis ("Leix" or "Lesia") as co-extensive with the Queen's County. See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 818, 943. This, however, is a great error, for the baronies of "Portnalineh," and "Tinnalineh," in that county, were a part of Ui Failghe (Oflaly), before the reign of Philip and Mary. The barony of "Upper Ossory," except a small portion at Annatrim, near Mountrath, belonged to the ancient kingdom of Osraidhe (Ossory), and the baronies of "Ballyadams" and "Slievemargy" were not originally a part of Laeighis, but belonged to families of the race of the Leinster Irish monarch Cathaeir Mor. Dr. O'Connor mistakes the situation of this territory altogether. See Annales Tighernachi, p. 96, where he writes: "Lagisia sita erat ad occidentalem Lifliei marginem, eratque posterioribus sæculis regio familiae nobilis O'More." After the establishment of surnames the chief family of Laeighis took the surname of O'Mordha (now called O'More, Moore, &c.) from Mordha (Majesticus), the twenty-fifth in descent from Conall Cearnach, and this name is now very numerous in Leinster. Garrett Moore, Esq., of Cloghan Castle, in the King's County, is supposed to be of this race, but no evidence has been yet discovered to prove his pedigree beyond the year 1611, or to show that he is of the Irish race. James O'More, of Ballina, in the county of Kildare, who was the contemporary and correspondent of Charles O'Connor of Belanagare, was the last head of this family. He was the lineal descendant of Rudhraidhe O'Mordha (Rory or Roger O'More), of the establishment of surnames the chief family of this territory took the surname of O'Duibh, which is probably that now anglicized to “Deevy” and “Devoy,” which are still common in the district.

⁹ Ui Crimthannan.—This territory, which was a part of Laeighis, is included in the present barony of “East Maryborough,” for we learn from O'h-Uidhrin's topographical poem, and from the pedigrees of the seven septa of Laeighis, given in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta, and in the genealogical compilation by Dubhaltach Mac Fírbisigh (Marquis of Drogheda's copy, p. 221), that it extended around the fortress of Dummasc (Dunamase). According to the Feilire Aenghusis, and the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 12th February, the church of Teach Daimhain (Tidowan), was in this territory. After

The country of their tribe was very extensive before the English invasion, for we have the clearest evidence to prove that it comprised the present baronies of “East and West Ophaly,” in the county of Kildare; those of “Portnahinch” and “Tinnahinch,” in the Queen's County; and that portion of the King's County, comprised in the diocese of “Kildare and Leighlin.” See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 243. OF THE TRIBUTES and refections of Laighin here:

Fearta Mughaine, Cuil Beannchair (Coolbanagher), Cluain Sosta (Cloonstost), and Cluain-imorrois, were in this territory. See the Irish Calendar of the O'Clérighs, at 16th January, 3rd September, and 6th and 20th October; and the Feilire Aenghuis, at 29th and 31st March, 25th April, 25th June, 3rd September, 6th and 20th October, and 4th December.

After the establishment of surnames the chief family of this great tribe took the surname of O'Conchobhair, Anglicè O'Conor, from Conchobhar, the nineteenth in descent from Cathaeir Mor, and remained in great power in the territory till the reign of Philip and Mary, when they were dispossessed, after which period O'Diomasaigh, Anglicè O'Dempsey, became the great family of the race, and remained in possession of a considerable part of Ui Failghe till the Revolution in 1688. Shortly after the English invasion the Fitzgeralds of Kildare wrested from O'Conchobhair Failghe (O'Conor Faly), and his correlatives, that portion of his original territory of Ui Failghe which is comprised in the present county of Kildare. There were then two "O'Falys," formed out of the ancient Ui Failghe, namely, the "English Ophaley," in the county of Kildare, giving the title of Baron to a branch of the Fitzgeralds, and the Irish Ui Failghe, extending into the present King's and Queen's counties, and giving the Irish title of Righ Ua bh-Failghe, or king of Ui Failghe (O'Faly), to O'Conchobhair Failghe (O'Conor Faly), the senior representative of Ros Failghe, the eldest son of Cathaeir Mor, monarch of Ireland in the second century.

Seven hundred cloaks from the Galls here imprimis, as a beginning of that tribute, and seven hundred tinnis and seven hundred hogs and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred oxen, seven hundred cows from the Galls too.

Two hundred milch cows and a hundred hogs and a hundred cloaks from Forthuatha Laighean.

The race of Fiacha, or the race of Ros Failghe, do not pay aught except a night's refection to the king of Laighin (Leinster), if he should go to a meeting eastwards to the Galls, or northwards to the Ui Neill, or to Munster southwards. But a hundred beeves and a hundred cows and a hundred hogs and a hundred tinnis are rendered by the unfree tribes of their lands.

Two hundred cows and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred beeves and two hundred cloaks and two hundred oxen from the seven Fotharta.

Seven hundred cows, seven hundred hogs and seven hundred wethers and seven hundred beeves from the seven Laeighse of Laighin.

Two hundred beeves and two hundred cows and two hundred cloaks from the Osraidhe.

Wood and renewing (uradh) and washing and cleansing, moreover, are due of the cocarts of the inferior grades among them. [To supply] purple and ruu and red and grey thread and white wool and blaán and bindeán is due of the best of the cocarts. If they render this [it is well]; or if they neglect to do so a double proportion [is to be levied] upon them. Every third year the above tributes are paid, except the great tribute of the king of Éire as we have said above. And it was of these the gifted sage Benean sang:

To the history that is not ever foolish,

What noble tribute is due

To the king of Cualann¹ is to be mentioned.

^c Unfree tribes.—The unfree tribes or daer-ehlanna of Leinster are not mentioned by their surnames; but the people called Forthuatha Laighean, who were not all slaves, bore various surnames, which are given at full length in the Books of Leacan and Baile an Mhuta. 'D. Mac Fírbisigh traces the pedigree of their king, Domhnall Ua or Mac Fearghail, to Mesincorb, son of Cucorb, king of Leinster, in twenty-seven generations. This is the Domhnall Mac Fearghail, Rígh Forthuatha Laighean, who was slain in the battle of Cluain Tarbh (Clontarf).

ḡ Fort of the foreigners.—This is intended to denote Dun Duibh-linne, the fort of the black pool (Dublin).

ⁿ Ailḡin, the son of Eolathach, of the race of Domhnall Dubh-dhamhach.—Nothing has been discovered in the authentic Irish Annals to show that there was ever such a king at Dublin. The names here mentioned are not Norse ones, and it seems quite certain that the Northmen never attempted to make any settlement in Ireland before the reign of Donnchadh, son of Domhnall, A. D. 794 (795), when, according to the Annals of Ulster, they made the first descent on the island of Reachrainn, off the north-east coast of Ireland. We learn from Irish history that Tuathal Teachtnhar, monarch of Ireland in the second century, married the daughter of Scal Balbh, king of Finland, and that Una, Danish princess, was the mother of Conn of the Hundred Battles. See O'Flaherty's Ogygia, part iii. cc. 56, 60, but no reference is made to a Norwegian colony being settled in Ireland in any other authority except this and Jocelin's Life of St. Patrick. No authority has been found in either the Scandinavian or Irish histories, annals, or sagas to suggest that they had any settlement on this part of the coast in or near Dublin before the year 836, when they entered the Boinn (Boyne) with a fleet of sixty sail, and the Life (Liffey) with another fleet of sixty sail, and plundered the plains of Magh Breagh and Magh Life, and in the same year established a colony at Ath Cliath or Dublin. Nor were they converted to Christianity till about the year 948. See Ware's works, vol. v. cap. 69, p. 60. Jocelin, in his Life of St. Patrick, states that the Irish apostle departing from the borders of Midhe (Meath), directed his steps towards Laignin (Leinster), and having passed the River Finglas, came to a certain hill almost a mile distant from Ath Cliath, and, casting his eyes

He who was king of hardy Ath Cliath,
When Patrick came from the north [from Teamhair],

Of the race of Domhnall Dubh-dhamhach^h.

round the place and the circumjacent country, he is said to have pronounced this prophecy: "Pagus iste nunc exiguus, eximius erit; divitiis et dignitate dilatabitur: nec crescere cessabit, donec in regni solium sublimetur." But this gatherer and beautifier of the popular legends respecting St. Patrick soon forgets himself (or his work has been unfairly interpolated by some modern scribes to serve a purpose), for in the next chapter but one he, in fabling language, introduces St. Patrick into the noble city of Dublin, which had been built by the Norwegians, (Norwagia et insularum populis), and which was then governed by a king, Alpinus, the son of Eochadh, from whose daughter Dublinia, forsooth, the city took its name. See Ussher's Primordia, pp. 861, 862; and Harris's History of the City of Dublin, p. 6. This is evidently the story which is said in the prose text to be taken from the Psalter of Caiseal, and for which the autho-riety of St. Benean is there alleged, but which cannot be as old as the year 836, when the Northmen first settled in Dublin. The old lives of St. Patrick state that he proceeded from Meath to Naas, which was then the residence of the kings of Leinster, and this is evidently the truth, as appears from the whole stream of Irish history. Dr. Lanigan thinks that this fable of the conversion of Ailpin, king of the Norwegians of Dublin, by St. Patrick, "was undoubtedly fabricated at Armagh," and that "either Jocelin was induced, in compliment to his patron, the Archbishop Thomas, to insert it in his book, or that it was foisted by some other hand into his MS."—Eccl. Hist. Ireland, vol. i. pp. 275, 276.

To the Apostle it was a reproach.

An ounce for each nose besides,—
And a screapall of gold for each man.

^o Its churches.—This shows that the poem was composed after the conversion of the Galls to Christianity. Ware says that the Danes were converted to the Christian faith in the reign of their king Godfrid, the son of Sitric, about the year 948; see his Antiquities, Ed. 1705, pp. 61, 62. The churches whose erection is usually ascribed to them are Mary’s Abbey, St. Audoen’s, and Christ’s Church.

^v The fort, &c., i. e. Teamhair.

¹ My curse upon Leaghairé.—Here it is evident that this particular poem was composed to flatter the Galls of Dublin by making St. Patrick pronounce a blessing on their fortress, at the same time that he pronounced a malediction against the fortress of the Irish monarchs. But there is no authority in the ancient Lives of St. Patrick, preserved in the Book of Armagh, or those published by Colgan, to show that he ever cursed Teamhair or Tara; that was reserved for Saint Ruadhan of Lothra (Rodanus of Lorha), the son of Fearghus Birn, son of Eochaidh, son of Deardubh, son of Daire Cearba, son of Oilioll Flann-beag, son of Fiacha Muilleathan, son of Eoghan Mor, son of Oiliol

“ I leave, upon them, all [these privileges, graces, or gifts],

 Gift of war and success of trophies,
 Gift to their abundant houses
 Of the quick circulation of drinking-horns and drinking.

“ Gift of [good] kings for ever in hardy Ath Cliath,
 Gift of hired soldiers, gift of native soldiers,
 Gift of veneration in its churches^o,
 Gift of habitation and commerce.

“ The fort^p whence I came from the north,
 May great success not be on its kings;
 [Though] great is the fame of his valor
 My curse upon Laeghaire^q.”

It is from this [curse] that the peace of the Galls
 Shall not be with the king of Midhe of the great swords, Between Teamhair and Liamhain
 There shall be a battle every year^r.

Olum, king of Munster; and it is strongly to be suspected that this poem, or, at all events, the present form of the poem, was fabricated in Munster, with a view to lessen the dignity of the Nepotes Neill, by making St. Patrick curse their king and palace, while he blessed the king of the foreigners of Dublin and their city. No opportunity is lost sight of to give this great race of Niall a stain. It is probable that this poem and others, and possibly the whole work, were produced at Caiseal, during the reign of Cormac Mac Cuilean-nain, when the enmity between the races of Oilíoll Olum and of Niall of the Nine Hostages was at its height; and the holy Cormac lost his life in a battle which he hazarded at Bealach Mughna, in Magh Aibhe, with Flann Sionna, monarch of Ireland, and head of the southern Uí Neill. See the Introduction.

^r There shall be a battle.—This is a quasi prophecy introduced after the event had occurred. It looks a strange result of the (supposed) curse of Teamhair and the blessing of Ath Cliath by the Irish apostle.

NO ONE IS ENTITLED to visitation or sale [of his poems],
 For he is not a truly learned poet
 In the use of various kinds of knowledge, Unless he knows distinctly
 The ample tributes and stipends
 That may all be rendered
 According to their various modes of distribution
 From beginning to end.
 Not entitled to visitation in any fair province
 Of the provinces of famous Banbha,
 Nor to the circuit of any chieftainry,—
 If justice be observed,—
 Is any poet who will not directly distinguish
 The advantages, the disadvantages of the dignity
 Of his poems in each territory he enters:
 When he is a learned historian,
 It is when he has read all the actions
 Of the isle of noble Eibhear^b.
 It is then he is a rock of an ollamh,
 Like a rock immoveable,
 When he comprehends the stipends
 And the tributes without doubt,
 So that he can recite them all
 In each noble meeting:
 Let him not be an old rusty vessel
 Influenced by wealth or friendship,
 For, exploded judgments should not be pronounced
 By a man of justice and mercy:
 He shall not be able to bind usages
 On the great or noble tribe,
 Unless thus he variously distinguishes—
 To his emoluments he is not entitled. NO ONE IS ENTITLED.

TEAMHAIR, THE HOUSE in which resided the son of Conn,
 The seat of the heroes on Liath-druim^c,
 I have in memory
 Their stipends to the chieftains.

Every king who occupies strong Teamhair,
 And possesses the land of Eire,
 He is the noblest among all
 The hosts of Banbha the fertile.

If he be a rightful king of Teamhair
 It is right for the chiefs
 To make each of them submission even at his house
 To the just and justly-judging king.

It is due of him to acknowledge the hosts

 For that is the great restriction of his restrictions.

That he may not wage fierce war
 With the host of the province of Conchobhar^d,

Entitled is the king of Eamhain Mhacha [to gifts],
For he is not one who will fail of his succession,
[And] every king who succeeds to a rightful inheritance
Shall receive no despicable gifts.

Entitled to half the warm house
Is that host of Eamhain Mhacha,
And they take,—it is no partiality of our's,
The exact half^h [of the house] along with [the rest of] Eire.

Wine is to be dealt out to them at Teamhair
Until their spirits are increased;

§ Clothes of every color.—According to Keating's History of Ireland one color was used in the dress of a slave, two colors in that of a plebeian, three in that of a soldier or young lord, four in that of a brughaidh or public victualler, five in that of a lord of a tuath or cantred, and six in that of an ollamh or chief professor of any of the liberal arts, and in that of the king and queen.—See Keating's History of Ireland, Haliday's edition, p. 322. The passage is translated by Dr. Lynch as follows:

"Hoc item rege, vestes rubeo cæruleoque colore infici cœperunt, et ad amictus varia ornamentorum genera artificum manibus addi. Idem insuper instituit, ut plebeiorum et infimi ordinis hominum indumentis unicus duntaxat inesset color, gregariorum autem militum vestimenta duobus coloribus; nobilium Ephaborum tribus; locupletum villicorum quatuor; tetrarchorum quinque; eruditorum denique, Regum et Reginarum, sex colorum varietate distinguerentur."

Variegated drinking-horns with their peaks,
Sets [of chessmen] with their chess-boards.

The full breadth of his face, of gold,
To the great, matchless king,
Two hundred cows and two hundred steeds,
Two hundred chariots,—no partial decision.

Twelve ships of the fleet of war
From the king of Teamhair of battles
[Are] to be sent for the sons of the chieftains
Because they are acceptable presents.

Twelve lances on which there is poison,
Twelve swords with razor edges,
Twelve suits of clothes of every color^s
For the use of the sons of the great chieftains.

A choice of courtship at Teamhair
Of princesses of highest minds
[Is] to be given to him^b, but so as he selects her
If she (the princess) be unmarried.

The protection of the red-hot javelin is given To the king of many-battled Uladh; [i. e.]
If he be at Teamhair of lords
That no one dare dishonor himⁱ.

^b To be given to him, i. e. in marriage. According to the traditions at Tailte (Telltown in Meath) all the marriages which took place in the kingdom were celebrated there in Pagan times, but the contract lasted for twelve months only, at the expiration of which the parties might separate if they pleased. The Editor, however, has never been able to test the truth of this tradition by any written evidence. At the period to which this poem refers, the Christian religion prevailed in the country, and it must be considered that marriage, according to the rites and ceremonies of the ancient Irish Church, is intended by the words in the text.

ⁱ That no one dare dishonor him, i. e. that no one violate his privileges. The word ἰάριύχαιός is translated "dishonorare" by the original compiler of the Annals of Ulster. See Pinkerton's extracts from those Annals in his Inquiry into the History of Scotland, where he remarks that this word is peculiarly Irish. For the various authorities which prove the exact meaning of the word, see the Editor's translation of the second part of the Annals of the Four Masters, note § under the year 1537, p. 1446. The protection of the red-hot javelin means that the king of Uladh was as untouchable as if he were a flaming sword or javelin; and, therefore, any who sought his protection were absolutely safe.

The Gaileanga^j [shall be] under rent [for the support] of his steeds;

The men of Breagh^k under the troops of his horsemen;
If he be at Teamhair of tribes
It is known that these are of his true territories.

His portion in the house of Teamhair,
Wherefor he should be of great cheerfulness,
[Is] three score beeves, twenty pigs,
Twenty tinnēs (salted pigs) for his mighty people (the Ullta).

Twenty handfuls of lecks, methinks,
Twenty eggs of gulls along with them,
Twenty baskets (hives) in which are bees,
And all to be given to him together.

He is entitled only to that
From the king of fair-surfaced Teamhair ;
And I say it twice (i. e. emphatically),
That is not the same as nothing.

Then forward to his mansion goeth
The king of Cuailghne^l with the battalions ;
[And] after resting from his journey
To distribute his stipends.

To the king of Rath Mor Muighe^m
Is due great [and] kingly wealth ;
For he is of the noblest on the journey
And the first who receives his stipend.

^u Loch Saileach.—This is evidently intended for Loch Suileach, Anglicè "Lough Swilly," the arm of the sea running into the county of Donegal. The valley here referred to is Gleann Suilighe (Glenswilly), near Litar Ceannaighe (Letterkenny), through which the River Suileach (Swilly) flows. See p. 23, and n. 3, ib.; the same geis occurs there, and thus Linn Saileach is identified.

^v Loch Feabhail, "Lough Foyle" (the arm of the sea running between Donegal and Derry), i. e. the lake of Feabhal, son of Lodan, one of the Tuatha De Danann colony. See poem on Aileach, published in the Ordnance Memoir of Templemore.

The reason that these are given them
 By the king of Uladh of the mighty [and] great arms,
 [Is] that their strength might be in his house,
 That they may go with him to Teamhair. . . TEAMHAIR.

THE RESTRICTIONS of the king of the Ultonian Eamhain
 And of his very brave sword [are]
 To go into a wild boar's haunt[†],
 [Or] to be seen to attack it alone.

 Of Loch Saileach[‡], the nobly melodious,
 To bathe on May-day eastwards
 In the bright and beautiful Loch Feabhail[‡].

Such are the hard restrictions
 Of the supreme king of the province of the Red Branch[‡] ;
 If he usually practise those [forbidden things],
 He shall never obtain Teamhair. TEAMHAIR.

OF THE PREROGATIVES of the great king of Uladh, [viz.]
 To keep his Easter at Caen-druim[‡],
 His stewards [to be] at Taillte[‡] through valor,
 Eamhain [to be] in the possession of his daughters.

That he have a fleet on Loch Cuan[‡], [Galls,

[And] fine textured clothes at Teamhair. . . TEAMHAIR.

SEVEN CHARIOTS on which is gold [ornament],
Which he brings with him to the banquet,
Seven score suits of clothes of [good] color
For the use of the sons of the great chieftains.

Then forward to his house goeth
The king of Laighin with the heroes,
Till he reaches the fortress of Nas-after a journey,
Till he distributes his stipends.

If with the brave Ui Ceinnsealaigh^d
The truly majestic sovereignty shall be,
Theirs is the dominion of [distributing] its fair wealth
To the princes and to the kings.

^v Luimneach.—This has been for many centuries exclusively the name of the city of Limerick; but it appears from the Life of St. Carllach of Lismore, that it was originally applied to the estuary of the River Sionainn below the present city, now sometimes called "The Lower Shannon." The king of Luimneach is here put for king of Tuath Mhumha (Thomond). See the next note.

^w Tuath Mhumha, i. e. North Munster, now Anglicé Thomond. According to Keating this territory extended from Leim Chonchulainn (Loop Head; see p. 75, n. ^a) to Bealach Mor ("Ballaghmore in Upper Ossory"), and from Sliabh Echtghe (Slieve Aughty, on the frontiers of the counties of Clare and Galway, see Ui Maine, page 91, note ^k) to Sliabh Eibhlinne (now Sleibhte Fheidhlimidh, in the county of Entitled is the petty-king of Corcamruadh⁴

 From the king of Tuath Mhumha (Thomond) of the lordships

Tipperary). The southern boundary of this great territory is still preserved in that of the diocese of Killaloe.

³ Liathmhuine.—This is the name of a celebrated place in the parish of "Kilgullane," in the territory of Feara Muighe, (Fermoy, in the county of Cork); but it seems irregularly introduced here as a distinguishing appellative of the king of Munster, when of the line of Eoghan, commonly called the Eugenic or Desmond line. It would apply very well when the king was of the line of the Uí Caemh (O'Keefes), of whom there was a king of Munster in 902, namely, Fionguine, son of Gorman, who died in that year.

his residence at Lissadorn, near Elphin, was O'Manchain (Monahan), but this family was dispossessed by the families of O'h-Ainlighe (O'Hanlys) and O'Birn (O'Beirnes) in the thirteenth century; see the Editor's Ann. IV. Mag. ad A. D. 1189, p. 86, n. ^d, and Miscell. Ir. Arch. Soc., p. 274.

To pay for his seat at Uisneach every seventh year, and the same is due of every province [provincial king] in Eire, in return for the Feis of Teamhair being made for the kings of Eire by the king of Teamhair; and it is there the chief sovereignty of the king of Teamhair over all Eire is reacknowledged [or renewed], and it was there they purchased their seats at Uisneach, and their recognition as kings of their provinces.

The price was a champion's ring, which used to be on the hand of each king, of gold. He used to leave it in his drinking seat when the Feis of Teamhair was consumed. And they adjudicated neither debts nor questions until another meeting at the end of seven years.

It is certain to the kings of Eire that, if they fulfil these restrictions and prerogatives, that there shall be no interruption to their reigns, and that neither pestilence nor famine, nor plague, nor strangers, shall overcome them; and that their lives shall not be short. Cuan cecinit.

^a This reading should have been inserted in the text, as was done in a like case at pp. 136, 137. The reference 34, in page 6, is misplaced. From the word ΛΥΑΖ, L. [ΛΥΑΟ, B.] in page 6, to the word "cecinit," in page 8, suprà, is all represented by the above extract from B.

NOTE.—The prose in B. only mentions teora (three) geasa of the king of Laighin, and as many of his buadha, omitting the first and second of the former and the fourth and fifth of the latter according to the order of enumeration in the poem. It omits the fourth of the buadha of the king of Connacht, which, indeed, seem to be six, both in the poem, and in the prose in L. So, the fourth of the buadha of the king of Uladh is not found in the prose in B. It calls the buadha of the monarch ceithora (four), though it mentions seven, and begins by saying that his urghartha are se (six), though it shows them also to be seven.

The order of enumeration in the prose varies much in both copies from that used in the poem; and the prose in B. differs in its order in many respects from the prose in L.

FINIT. AMEN. SOLAM O DROMA NOMINE SGRIOSID].

THE following remarks on the style of writing observed in the two MSS. (L. and B.) which have been now the subject of comparison, may interest the critical Irish reader. They are offered in addition to what has been said at the close of the Introduction.

1st. As regards aspiration. The dot, as a mark of aspiration, is seldom used in those MSS., and even more sparingly in L. than in B., though the latter is rather the more ancient MS. The letter h, to denote aspiration, is frequently used, but its use is strictly confined to three cases, viz., ch, th, and ph. This last is rather of rare occurrence, for the letter p itself is infrequent in the Irish language, and its aspirate of course still more so. The aspirates bh, dh, fh, gh, mh, ph, do not occur once in either MS.

The cause of this plainly was, that the school of writing in which the scribes were trained was a Latin school, in which ch, ph, and Ϡh (following the Greek aspirates χ, φ, θ), alone were used; the other aspirates, bh, dh, &c., were unknown to the Greeks and Romans, and were therefore considered inadmissible by the Latin scribes.

For the same reason, in forming Latin names, Teamhair became Temoria; Laighin, Lagenia; Uladh, Ulidia; Mumha, Momonia; Breagh became Bregia; Laeghaire, Loegarius; Ruadhan, Rodanus, &c. &c. But Ard Macha preserved its form, the aspirate being already known in the Latin tongue; and Muireadhach became Muredachus, in which the aspirate dh was commuted to d, while ch was preserved.

That the habits of the Irish scribes were Latinized will further appear from an inspection of some of the contractions in common use: for instance, γ for αcup, ῑ for αcc, ῑ for νό. These are obviously Latin, viz., γ et, ῑ sed, ῑ vel, corresponding in meaning with the three Irish particles just mentioned; and in the MSS. these Latin contractions are introduced into the body of Irish words, to express, at one time, the letters of the Irish particles, and at another the letters of the corresponding Latin particles. Thus, γip stands not for αcup ip, but εcup, i. e. cup, between; so coῑῑ stands for Connacc, and catme for canoine. So ũ is used for the Irish imoppo, corresponding with the Latin vero, which it represents.

The omission of the dot in writing, or of h in a Latin name, can seldom be taken against other evidence as proof that aspiration was not used. The constant use of ch and Ϡh in these MSS., and the occasional use of the dot, determine the usage of the language at the time; and it will be found that the habit and rules of the language, as regards aspiration in speaking, have varied in little or nothing from the fourteenth century to the present time.

In editing Leabhar na g-Ceart, the omitted dot has been generally supplied, but not over initial capital letters, for the use of the dot over capitals is inconvenient in printing; but where, in the case of a capital letter, aspiration is connected with the construction of the language, as when used between one part of speech and another, to mark their mutual dependence, an h has been inserted, but always in a parenthesis (h), as it was determined to print the text without the addition of a letter; as in ó M(h)urcraib, ap S(h)aiman, do-m'

Ḑ(h)aire, α Ḑ(h)aire. In similar situations, after C and T the text already possessed the h, as ó Chiappaioib, ιερ Themair ιρ Liaman. But when there was no such government the parenthetical (h) has not been inserted, as Deap Ḑabair for Deas Ghabhair. The dot found in the MSS. has in some cases been preserved over the initial capital, as ó Ḑearaib Aipca, p. 186; oo i'íl Ḑiachach, p. 204; oo piḑ Ḑorpuath, p. 206.

Secondly, as regards eclipsing. We find that the proper eclipsis has, with almost perfect regularity, been inserted in three cases, viz., before b, d, and g, i. e. by mb, nd, and ng; or, as we have printed them, m-b, n-d, and n-g; also in the corresponding prefixing of n before vowels in similar situations, as n-a; thus, peact m-bpuit, oet n-dam, nae n-gabra, deic n-eic.

In the cases, however, of words of eclipsing power occurring before the consonants c, f, p, t, eclipsis is never used in these MSS.

Now this occurs, not because the eclipsing sound was not adopted in these cases, just as much as in those we had just noticed, but from quite a different cause. It will at once be seen that the consonants c, f, p, t, are those in which, in the succeeding century, the act of eclipsing was designated by a simple reduplication of the consonant, viz., by cc, ff, pp, tt; and there is no more doubt that the single letters in our text, in the eclipsed situations, were sounded exactly as they are now pronounced, than that those redoubled letters were so expressed: and thus, peacht claidim, ocht failgi, in the fourteenth century; peact cclaidim, oet ffailgi, in the sixteenth century; and peact g-claidim, oet b-failge, in the eighteenth century, are the same.

The parenthesis has also been used to exhibit this eclipsis to the reader, and the text appears thus: peact (g)-claidim, oet (b)-failgi.

Thirdly, as regards the accent, or mark of long quantity. The adoption of this improvement, which enables the reader at once to enjoy his text by being informed how the best scholars of the age consider that it ought to be expressed, stood free of all difficulty. Not a single accent is discoverable in the entire text, either in B. or L., and therefore no disadvantage could here arise from the adoption of the accent.

Fourthly, as regards the use of the vowels and consonants in these Manuscripts.

The diphthong oo, or triphthong ooi, never once occurs in the entire work; æ is the form generally used, occasionally œ; therefore, Ζαεξαίπε, and sometimes Ζοεξαίπε, never Ζαοξαίπε. The æ is used as a broad diphthong, though ending in a slender vowel, and no confusion results from the use of it. Instead of αι, æ occurs several times; very often αι in which the i is long, and it is accented αῑ in this edition, as in Καθαίρη, δαίπε, ράίπε.

The diphthong eu never once occurs. It was subsequently invented as a substitute for έα, and very uselessly, as the use of the accent was preferable to a change in orthography.

The modern diphthongs ίο and ιο never once occur. The simple vowel ι is used, and the reader is supposed to understand that it ends broad. Thus we have ρίλ, not ρίολ; Κρίρη, not Κρίορη; ρίρ, ρίρ, ρίραυδ, τριχη, not ρίορ, ρίορ, έριραυδ, τριχοχη, &c., in such words there was little or no occasion ever to have introduced the "ο." In words whose terminations take the slender inflexion, it might, indeed, be said that the distinction afforded between ιο (broad) and ι (slender) is an advantage, as if the Nom. be made Καριολ, and Gen. Καριλ; or Gen. Επιριον and Dat. Επιριν. But in such cases a much better rule would have been to have adhered steadily to the Gen. Επιραων and Nom. Καριεα, and to have reserved the Επιριν and Καριλ for the slender terminations. The form Επιραων (Επιραωνδ, Επιραωνδ) occurs oftenest, but it must be admitted that Επιριν, Επιριδ, &c., in the Gen. also are often found here.

The simple e for the diphthong εα, terminating broad, occurs very often; but on the whole it appears, that at the date of these MSS., the use of εα was decidedly prevalent, and a great advantage was gained thereby, for whether the εα (unaccented) έα (e accented) or εά (α accented) be intended, the α always governs or influences the sound.

In the same way the simple e is often used where ει is used at other times, as Ετε for Ειτε, Επε for Ειπε, εϋ for ειϋ, δεϋ for οειϋ, ρεϋ for οειϋ.

A final ι occurs frequently for a final e, as Μυρεπιουι for Μυρεπιουε.

There are various words in which irregular vowels are found, as ζαπαρητα for ζαπαρητα; so ζυ (B.) for ζο.

With respect to consonants there is a very general use of the primary (spirate) mute (c) for the medial (vocal) letter (χ) of the same organ; as acur (in L.) for agur (which occurs in B.); co for co, céat for céad, cóic for cúig, cach for gach, ic for ag, taibc for taibg, and caippe for caipre.

There is a good deal of looseness in the use of g (i. e. ǵ) for o (i. e. ð), and vice versa, especially in the ends of words and between vowels, as Teaipaib for Teaipag, loige for luide, &c.

The use of the nn is frequent, but the no in place of it is still more so. There is a circumstance observable in these MSS., proving, as is generally known, that the o in the no was not pronounced, viz., that in a great many instances the o is dotted, thus, nó, as may be seen above at pp. 279, 280, &c.

W. E. H.

CORRIGENDA.

THE words leabur na c-Cearc in p. 28, l. 1, should have been printed na (ǵ)-Cearc. The MS. B. does not contain the second c.

The whole passage in B., referred to by Nos. 147, 148, to p. 280 (see Various Readings, p. 287), runs as follows:

Facbam fop an Aċ uile,—b. m-ban fop a ban-cúipe,—

b. ap [a] gallaib glana,—b. n-aile ap a mgeana,—

ð. rnaia ap macaib a m-ban,—b. cogais ip b. comraim,—

b. dia ðaltaib gonna,—im luað copn ip comola.

It appears by the fourth and seventh lines that the possessive pronoun here intended is the masculine singular; although there is a change to the plural in the fifth line, just as the plural runs through the text in L. Consequently Aċ, the Ford, is referred to, and the division of letters into words in the first line of the text in B. is correct, and the translation should run as follows:

I leave upon the whole Ford,—

Gift of being good wives upon ITS female bands,

Gift, &c.

Some omissions to insert the necessary marks of aspiration, eclipsis, and long quantity, in the Irish text, have taken place, particularly in pp. 28, 30, 32, which went to press before the rules to be observed were settled so fully as subsequently they were; and even in the succeeding pages an attentive observer will detect, occasionally, omissions of the proper marks, which it is hoped the indulgent reader will excuse; for it is indeed difficult altogether to avoid error in such matters, although there can be no doubt that, with aid so eminent as has been enlisted in the present publication,—Mr. Curry transcribing the MS. for the printer,—and Mr. O'Donovan superintending its progress through the press,—the highest perfection of accurate editing of the Irish text is attainable. But the rules to be ultimately adopted should be thoroughly understood beforehand. In the present case the whole MS. was transcribed in the same manner as that from which the text of the Seapa, &c. (pp. 2-24) was printed; and many of the typographic niceties afterwards adopted, were only gradually developed and systematized in the progress of the work through the printer's hands.
